Sacco, Vanzetti, Doomed to Death, Plan New Fight

Through With Massachusetts Courts But May Appeal to Governor and U. S. Tribunal.

DRAMATIC PLEAS MADE FOR LIVES

Two Prisoners Assail Presiding Judge as They Hear Sentence of Court Pronounced.

BY CECIL OWEN.

Boston, April 9.—(United News.) In a setting marked by outward serenity but seething internally with drama and tragedy, Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti made stirring personal pleas for their lives today just before they were doomed to die in the electric chair during the week of July 10.

Tonight the two alleged slayers were back in jail, with only 13 weeks left in which to make the final moves in their world-wide sensational legal battle to escape the death penalty in expiation of a double murder committed seven years ago next Friday.

No further court action will be taken in Massachusetts towards saving the lives of the condemned men, their lawyers said late today in their first official statement since the recent state supreme court decision denying a new trial.

Previously it was thought an appeal might again be taken to the commonwealth's highest court for rehearing.

Their last hope, admittedly now a slender one, apparently rests with the governor of Massachusetts, the United

ALLEGED THIEVES OF ATLANTA CARS TO BE RETURNED

Four Suspects Nabbed in Knoxville, Alabama; 10 Machines Stolen Here Are Recovered.

Four alleged automobile thieves captured in Knoxville, Ala., by Detectives L. H. Satterfield and Sam H. Smith, in connection with the recovery of ten machines said to have been stolen in this city, were on their way here under guard Saturday while detectives were preparing to follow up clues which it is believed will lead to the arrest of a pair of bandits who stole an expensive coupe a week ago from the Candler garage at Houston and Ivy streets.

Detectives Smith and Satterfield traced the bandit pair as far as Phoenix City, Ala., and recovered the stolen coupe when it was abandoned by the fleeing automobile thieves. Detectives would not divulge information on which they hope to capture the two alleged thieves, but said that they expect arrests early this week.

Twelve cars in all were recovered by Detectives Smith and Satterfield in their week-end endeavors, a car stolen from Columbus, Ga., having been located at the same time the Atlanta coupe was recovered in Alabama. Arrangements are now being made to transport the Knoxville cars to Atlanta so that the machines may be identified and returned to their owners.

The four alleged automobile thieves captured at Knoxville gave the names of Glenn McCullough, C. O. Glenn Hoyt H. Hall and Morris Young. Police claim to have names of two bandits who took the coupe from the Candler garage in April after overpowering and binding the night watchman, T. H. Meadows, and on the basis of information gained by Detectives Smith and Satterfield are predicting early arrests of the pair, who abandoned the coupe in a district known as "Seven Road Bridges," about 12 miles from Phoenix City, Ala.

KING FERDINAND IS DECLARED OUT OF DANGER

Bucharest, Rumania, April 9.—(AP) King Ferdinand's physicians consider him out of immediate danger, it is learned on the best authority.

The bronchial-pneumonia complications have completely disappeared, and unless there are unforseen develonments, there is every hope that he will speedily be restored to normal condition.

This optimism is limited to the present crisis, however. Nothing is definitely known concerning development of the symptoms of cancer which caused his first illness.

NAVY CRITICISM DENIED BY KING

Senator Claims He Did Not Make Attack and Says That He Did Not Receive Rebuke.

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—Senator King, of Utah, today issued a denial of reports that he had criticized the use of American troops to protect American property in a recent speech to soldiers and sailors on the transport St. Mihiel.

The reports, published today in the Washington Post, said the senator had been taken to task by a young army officer aboard, who had declared the tone of the speech was un-American. The senator said it was "wholly untrue" that he had made such criticisms or that he had been rebuked by the officer.

War department officials gave no indication today of taking official cognizance of published reports of the speech in which the Post said Senator King attacked the government for sacrificing American youth in order to protect the investments abroad of the wealthy few. His remarks, the Post said, were resented by a lieutenant.

It was said that the department had only an informal account of the reported incident.

Major General Eli Helmick, inspector general of the army, who, with a number of members of congress, was aboard the ship, was said to have investigated it but so far as could be learned today no official report of the affair has been entered on the department records and none is expected. General Helmick declined today to discuss the subject.

Senator King, in a statement, said: "The facts are that I was invited by the chaplain to speak to the soldiers who were returning to the United States to be mustered out after service in Haiti and I was asked to tell of my exclusion from that country.

"I told them my experiences with officials of Haiti and related the history of the country and gave my views on American occupation which I do not approve. When I finished, the troops cheered me and a young lieutenant arose and explained that I had expressed only my own individual views and that the soldiers should keep an open mind until the other side of the controversy was presented. I thoroughly approved of the lieutenant's statement and in no sense regarded it as a rebuke."

What Is Home Without The Sunday Constitution?

Well, it isn't a happy home—that's sure, and you wouldn't be able to start the day right if the big paper wasn't lying at your door early Sunday morning.

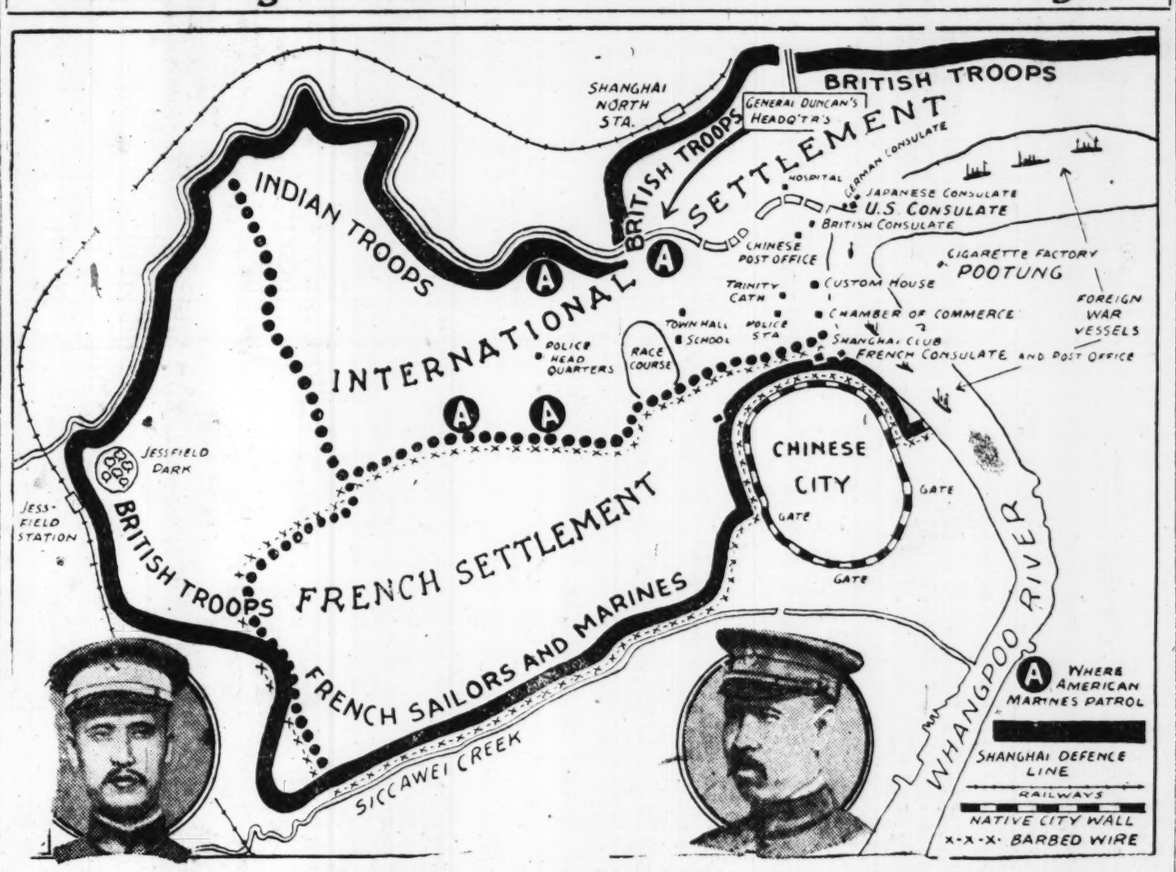

It's wonderful value for the small sum it costs, for it carries something of interest to every member of the family.

One of the great features is the splendid array of advertisements in which the merchants of Atlanta offer you seasonable merchandise at prices that represent a wonderful saving.

We bespeak your very careful consideration of the various advertisements. Look for the articles in which you are interested, and note how reasonably they are priced.

JACK LANCE TRIAL OPENS APRIL 19

First of Trials of Suspects of Bert Donaldson Murder May Take Up One Week.

Jack Lance, under joint indictment with seven others in connection with the murder of Bert Donaldson, noted bunco sleuth, will go on trial in Fulton superior court Tuesday, April 19, Solicitor General John A. Boykin announced Saturday.

The trial is to be presided over by Judge John D. Humphries, and is expected to consume more than a week.

Lance is being held incommunicado in Fulton tower after indictment by a Fulton county grand jury with R. B. Lovett, C. H. Fitchett, Abe Nissenbaum, Flim King, Ed Lee, Ike Snead, and Whitey Jones, following the confession of Fitchett.

In Fitchett's confession, a plot to kill the investigator was revealed and the seven men were implicated by him. Lance is alleged to have been the man who "steered" Donaldson to the hotel under the pretense of giving him information concerning the whereabouts of Jack Wilson, wanted for the murder of W. H. Cheek, Peachtree road grocer.

When Donaldson walked into the hotel room he was shot in the back with a load of buckshot fired from a muffled shotgun in the hands of an assassin secreted in a clothes closet in the room.

Cochran, Taylor Draw Sentences In Contempt Case

Cobb Citizen and Attorney Given Alternatives of Fine or Term of 20 Days in Jail.

Marietta, Ga., April 9.—(Special.) Contempt proceedings against J. A. Cochran, of Mableton, and his attorney, G. Hall Taylor, of Atlanta, heard here this afternoon before Judge John S. Wood, resulted in Cochran being fined $150 or a sentence of 20 days in jail, and Taylor being fined $75 or 20 days in jail. The attorney paid his fine and it was stated that Cochran would serve his term in jail.

In passing sentence, Judge Wood, directing his remarks mostly at Taylor, pointed out the necessity of the dignity of the court being respected and upheld, and declared he had no personal feelings in the matter and felt that that while Taylor may not have meant disrespect to the court, that the attorney should have been more careful in preparing the petition and should have investigated the charges made by his client, Cochran. The judge stated he was disposed to be lenient with Taylor.

Taylor in his statement to the court stated he meant no disrespect in preparing the paper, but drew it up solely on information furnished him by his client, Cochran. Cochran in his defense pleaded ignorance of how to prepare the petition and stated that Taylor had acted solely upon information given him.

Taylor was represented by Frank

"Soul Mates" Are Arrested In Local Hotel

Love Pact, Signed in Blood, Found in Baggage; Pair Wed — to Others.

Admitting they were "soul mates" although married to other individuals, Mrs. W. F. Bailey, 19, blonde and beautiful, and Earl H. Murray, 26, angular and ambitious, both of Tampa, Fla., were arrested at a downtown hotel late Saturday night and held at the local jail pending advices from the Forida city.

Not only are they "soul mates" but evidence to this effect was produced by Lieutenant E. S. Acree upon searching the couple's baggage. For enclosed was a pact signed and sealed in crimson blood. The pact read:

Un-Christlike Churches Rapped by Ben Lindsey

:: FAMOUS JUVENILE JUDGE ANSWERS CRITICS HERE ::

BY HERB M'CUSKER.

Declaring that "morality can't be rammed down men's throats by threats of violence;" that "some churches have been preaching un-Christlike doctrines too long," and that oftentimes divorce proves to be "society's safety valve," former Judge Ben Lindsey noted champion of children and storm center of one of the most bitter social controversies of recent years, gave the lie at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel Saturday to his critics who accuse him of attempting to introduce "communist trial marriage" in the United States.

The dapper, slight and animated little jurist who gained world-wide distinction through wise and benevolent dealing with minor culprits who were hailed before him in the juvenile court of Denver until he was deposed following a political fight recently, spoke frankly and crisply in making a denial of the accusations hurled at him by members of the clergy since he announced his theory of "companionate marriage."

"Strangely enough, many of my critics have rushed into print with vehement statements without taking the trouble of delving into the facts beforehand," he said. "One minister has been quoted as saying that I am attempting to inaugurate the Russian communist system of trial marriage—adding that it is shocking to think of such a thing because out of every thousand marriages in Russia 229 eventualy end in divorce."

"Now if that particular minister had taken the slight trouble to investigate before making such a statement he would have learned that, right here in the United States, out of every 1,000 marriages between 400 and 600 end in divorce. No doubt that information would have dealt him a worse shock."

Judge Lindsey is not opposed to

RADIO WEDDING SCHEDULED TO GO ON AIR TONIGHT

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—A radio wedding, with bride and bridegroom playing their own wedding march, went on the air tonight from Station WLS when "Ralph and Elsie" became Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Emerson.

There was a real minister, real bridesmaids, real best man and real rice, and the entire proceedings traveled forth into the night on 345 meters.

For several months Ralph Emerson and Elsie Mae Look, organists for WLS, have carried on a radio courtship which has been accepted by the blase radio audiences as more or less "program stuff." The studio organ and piano were used in the courtship, the two artists playing their dialogue of love with the microphone drinking it all in and gossipping it immediately to listening thousands.

HAMMOND'S TRIAL OPENS WEDNESDAY

Brutal Murder of Mrs. Lottie Bell Ingram and Baby Laid to Accused Man.

Trial of Harold A. Hammond, charged with slaying Mrs. Lottie Bell Ingram and her 18-months-old son, Floyd, who were found dead in a bed at the Ingram home on Ashby street, on the morning of February 4, has been set for Wednesday, April 13. Judge Edgar E. Pomeroy, of the criminal division of Fulton superior court, will preside at the trial.

Hammond was a fugitive for several weeks following the double murder but was captured by a city policeman near the scene of the crime on March 13. He was severely grilled by city detectives and Solicitor Boykin but emphatically denies any part in the slayings.

In a "voice test" conducted under the supervision of city detectives, several witnesses declared they recognized his voice as that of the "stranger who asked them the location of the Ingram home" on the night the murder occurred. Hammond denies being in the vicinity of the Ingram home on February 4.

Mrs. Ingram, wife of an employee of a local cotton mill, was beaten to death with a smoothing iron and her infant son was strangled to death with a strip of cloth drawn about his neck. The bodies were discovered by Ingram upon his return home from work.

The double slaying is believed to be closely linked with the flogging a short time previous of a brother-in-law of Mrs. Ingram and startling disclosures are slated at the trial, according to attaches of the solicitor's office.

"LIAR" IS BARRED AS FIGHT WORD IN COURT RULING

Helena, Mont., April 9.—(AP)—In Montana a man may call another a liar and get away with it.

Even out here in the west where a man's life in times past has hung on less, the supreme court says: "Provocative acts and words, if unaccompanied by any overt act of hostility, are no justificaton for assault."

Peculiarly enough, the assault figuring in a decision today resulted from a most modern device, the radio, the first occasion the court has had to concern itself with that invention. Steve Arnold, a rancher in Yellowstone county, spent his spare time selling radios. One went wrong and William J. Hageman came to Arnold's house to protest. He called Arnold a liar. Arnold says he slapped his accuser.

Hageman went to court, charging assault. The supreme court says he is entitled to judgment.

NOTE OF RUSSIA SEEKS RELEASE OF ALL CAPTIVES

Chinese Also Are Told That They Must Return Documents Seized in Recent Raids.

CANTONESE DEMAND CONSULS APOLOGIZE

Picketing of Soviet Embassy in Shanghai Is Cause—Two American Prisoners Freed.

BY VICTOR KNAUTH.

Moscow, April 9.—(United News.) Soviet Russia tonight severed diplomatic relations with the northern Chinese government at Pekin.

The entire staff of the soviet embassy in Pekin was recalled and passports were handed to the members of the Chinese diplomatic mission in Moscow.

This action was accompanied by a note addressed to the Pekin government by Max Litvinoff, soviet acting foreign secretary in the absence of Georges Tchitcherin. The note also presented a series of demands, growing out of the raid which Chinese police made this week on the soviet embassy in Pekin.

Demands of Russia.

The Russian demands were:

1. Immediate withdrawal of Chinese troops which are occupying the buildings in the soviet embassy compound.

2. Release of all soviet officials who were arrested in the raid.

3. Immediate return of all documents, money and property seized in the raid.

The note did not fix any time limit for compliance with these demands, nor did it threaten action if the requests were not fulfilled. It remarked that the Russian government "possesses sufficient resources to take punitive measures," but added it was unwilling to employ these resources because it "knew very well" the foreign imperialists had inspired the activities against the soviet.

Russia Seeks Peace.

Russia, the note added, would strive for peace "with all possible measures."

The communication pointed out that the Russian government considered it necessary to recall Charge d'Affaires Chernikh, and the entire embassy staff, leaving in China only soviet officials with consular functions.

The break between Moscow and Pekin was due primarily to a raid on the Russian premises adjoining the soviet embassy in Pekin on April 6, made by Chinese police with the approval of the foreign diplomatic corps.

Three hundred police descended on

Kennedy-Blackmer Players

ENTHUSIASM RAMPANT OVER ERLANGER ENGAGEMENT

And Officials Reach City

BY PAUL STEVENSON.

As Priestly Morrison, noted stage director, arrived from New York Miss Madge Kennedy, Sidney Blackmer and other members of the company of New York players who will give a series of ten dramatic productions in Atlanta for ten weeks, beginning Monday night, arrived from the middle west and held an "enthusiastic meeting" in the office of Lewis Haase, manager of the Erlanger theater, Saturday night as they discussed plans for an engagement here which is unique in theatrical history.

"We are thrilled and excited to death over the chance to play ten weeks in Atlanta," is the way Miss Kennedy expressed herself, and the other players, directors and managers with the organization echoed this sentiment with enthusiasm.

With Mr. Morrison came Charles L. Wagner, noted New York producer, whose company will play the ten weeks here. The producer, the director, Miss Kennedy, Mr. Blackmer and others in the cast acted just like school children when they get an unexpected holiday because the furnace won't work.

Great Program.

"We are going to give Atlanta ten great plays, beginning with 'Love In a Mist,' for the week beginning Monday and in the list will be at least three plays which will be produced here for the first time on any stage," was the promise of Mr. Wagner.

On top of this announcement Mr. Wagner said he would stay in Atlanta himself for a large part of the time his players are here and he made the added announcement that Abraham L. Erlanger, one of the foremost figures in the theatrical business, will visit Atlanta during the engagement.

Mr. Morrison, who will have full charge of the stage direction in Atlanta, has just finished staging "The Barker," one of Mr. Wagner's big New York hits, and had just given the finishing touches to a second company which will open next week in Chicago in this play when he left New York for Atlanta.

Something New.

"This Atlanta series of productions is something new in the theatrical business," Mr. Morrison said. "Ordinarily this is the busy time in New York for stage directors and I would not have considered leaving that city had I not seen the possibilities here for doing some big things in the way of productions.

Mr. Morrison inspected the stage of the Erlanger theater a few minutes after he arrived and then took a trip over every part of this beautiful structure.

"It is superb," he said. "I never saw a greater stage than the one I found here at the Erlanger and I intend to build every piece of scenery especially for each of the productions we will offer on it. I have ground plans drawn of the stage and the scenery will be arranged specially for each of the productions just as though the production were being offered for the first time."

Experienced Director.

Mr. Morrison is a director of 35 years' experience. Among the almost numberless productions he has staged are such successes as "Alias the Deacon," offered recently at the Hudson theater under the management of Samuel Wallack; "Smilin' Through," the great success of Jane Cowl; several plays of Oliver Morosco and other managers, also a recent Harvard prize play. He was for two years in Australia as stage director for J. E. Williamson.

"The situation in Atlanta is certainly unusual," Mr. Morrison said. "We have a beautiful new theater, an enthusiastic manager of that theater in Lewis Haase, we have the backing of Mr. Wagner and Mr. Erlanger in the venture and have a cast of players who are not the usual stock players, but are accepted New York stars, to play leading roles in the various plays we will offer here. Such an array of talent at popular prices is assuredly something unique in the theatrical world."

Members of the company will appear in "Love in a Mist" the first week. They have been playing this success for the entire year and scored a tremendous hit in Atlanta with the show during a three-day engagement recently. Mr. Morrison said rehearsals would begin Tuesday morning for "Fair and Warmer," which will be the second offering. Miss Kennedy has played the lead in this production before and other members of the company have been studying their parts during recent weeks. The third offering will be "The Mountain Man," Mr. Blackmer's big success, followed by "The First Year," a John Golden success, and "Quarantined," a sparkling comedy. After these plays will come three surprises in the shape of new productions, offered for the first time on any stage, according to Mr. Wagner, the producer, who will announce the names of the plays later.

At Georgian Terrace.

The players who arrived Saturday are quartered at the Georgian Terrace hotel. Among those who will appear in the first production are Miss Kennedy, Mr. Blackmer, Miss Mary Marble, an old Atlanta favorite; Alice John, Jack Willard and Miss Natalie Shaffer. Frank Sylvester, who scored a big New York hit as the insane man in "The Misleading Lady," will arrive next week to play a role in the second week's offering. Noted stars, selected for their fitness for the roles they will play, will be brought here to augment the Kennedy-Blackmer company, according to Mr. Wagner.

If enthusiasm means anything to actors and actresses and if backing by the leading theatrical enterprises of the country can make it a success, the Atlanta engagement of the Kennedy-Blackmer combination bids fair to be one which will bring much enjoyment to the amusement loving public of Atlanta.

1 KILLED, 4 HURT AS SALUTE CANNON GOES OFF TOO SOON

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Bayonne, N. J., April 9.—A salute cannon went off prematurely as New Jersey Sea Scouts were launching their boat, the Essex, today at Bayonne, and when the smoke cleared away, one man was found dead and five were injured.

The man killed was Nelson Twiner, 22, of Orange, N. J. He was "skipper" of the Maplewood and South Orange branches of the Sea Scouts, which in turn is a branch of the Boy Scouts of America. Those hurt are:

George Kraemer, 40, of West Orange; Edward Kraemer, 18, son of George; Clifford Wilson, of West Orange; A. Hardy, 24, photographer for the Newark Star Eagle, and A. J. Johnston, photographer for the Newark Sunday Call.

GOVERNOR ASKED TO ARBITRATE SCHOOL STRIKE

Superior, Wis., April 9.—(AP)—Governor Fred R. Zimmerman has been asked to assume the role of arbiter in the Superior school strike.

An appeal to "remove oppression" of the public school officials and restore normal conditions in the schools, was made to the chief executive in a letter mailed yesterday by a citizen's committee. At Madison, the governor said he had not yet received the communication.

Within 10 days the original group of 800 Central High school students who left their classes because the board of education refused to consider reinstatement of an English teacher who had been ousted after 24 years of service, have been joined by 500 other students, some from other high schools in the city.

Strike leaders today started to canvass the town, selling blue cards to raise funds for strike advertising, literature and other costs.

FLORIDA COUPLE WED, THEN RETURN TO PRISON CELLS

Fort Myers, Fla., April 9.—(AP)—Love laughed at locksmiths in the Lee county jail here tonight and Edith Hawkins, 29, and Otto H Partenheimer, 35, got out long enough to be married.

Arrested a week ago in a raid by sheriff's deputies and held on a charge of sale and possession of liquor, they managed to continue their courtship though confined on different floors of the jail. Today they communicated to Sheriff F. B. Tippens their desire to be married and he gave his consent after learning from County Judge N. G. Stout, that there was no law against it. The couple were taken from their cells to the judge's office for the ceremony and returned to spend their honeymoon behind the bars while awaiting trial.

THOMPSON SEEKS TO PUT WET PLANK IN G. O. P. PLATFORM

Chicago, April 9.—William Hale Thompson, newly elected mayor of Chicago, intends to sound out republican politicians on the prohibition question, and if he finds sentiment in his favor he will start a drive to "hammer" a wet plank into the 1928 republican national platform, he said tonight.

"I believe the country is wet and that beers and light wines should be legalized for home use," Thompson told the United Press, pointing out at the same time that he opposed the return of saloons.

"The old-time saloon was bad," he said, "but I believe most cities are finding what Chicago has found—that law enforcement has broken down as a result of the unpopular Volstead law. If I find other cities agree with me, I shall fight to hammer a wet plank into the party platform."

Chicago's new mayor-elect, who has been mentioned by some of his more ardent loyalists as a possible presidential candidate, is planning to leave next week on a tour of the south. He will start his investigation of prohibition sentiment on that trip.

GIANT SAWFISH ATTACK SPANISH MACKEREL SCHOOLS

Dunedin, Fla., April 9.—(AP)—Disappearing as suddenly as they came numerous giant sawfish which swarmed into the waters of the Gulf of Mexico off Dunedin earlier in the week and attacking Spanish mackerel schools drove them from their accustomed feeding grounds, threatening to seriously interfere with the local fishing industry, have left local waters and are reported by fishermen as being to the southward.

Eight of the sea giants, harpooned by local fishermen, who with comrades from nearby communities waged a relentless war against the marauders, were the mute reminders of the uninvited visitors.

Two of the largest were 14 feet long, weighing over 1,000 pounds and had 42-inch saws. The smallest was nine feet long.

Crack Engineer Preaches

:: FANT DECLARES "LAST RUN" IS HARDEST ::

"Salvation" to Fellowmen

The iron-nerved man peering from the cab opening of the Crescent Limited, as he drives the crack special of the Southern railway daily from Greenville, S. C., into Atlanta is not the solid piece of mechanism he seems.

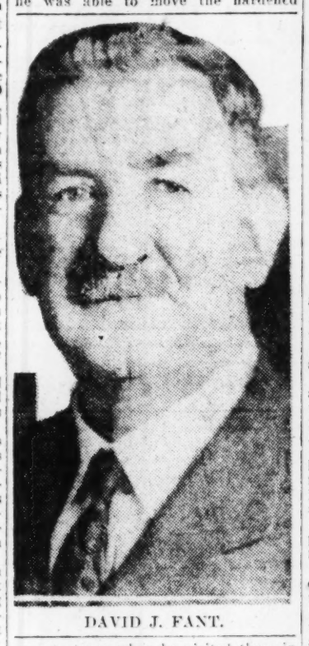

And in spite of the fact that Engineer David J. Fant has made the same run for 18 years and spent 39 years out of 38 with the Southern, there is no indication that the metal with which he is almost constantly in contact has chilled his heart. On the contrary, it is the warmth of his heart, filled with his belief in gospel preachings, that makes his hard day's work a pleasure as part of his service to mankind, he has declared.

Engineer Fant is a lay preacher during his spare hours. And when he came into the office of The Constitution Saturday to announce the morning and afternoon Bible program to be conducted by him in cooperation with W. W. Waits, superintendent of terminals, at Inman yards today, he brought evidence of his favorite slogan. "good will to man."

For 20 years Mr. Fant has carried his message of evangelism to railroad men throughout the country. He has spoken in shops as far north as Montreal, Canada, and as far west as Aberdeen, S. D., as well as all points of the south But this does not interfere with getting the Crescent Limited into Atlanta on time, nor does it allow of any mishaps on the midnight express that the preacher-engineer guides back to Greenville from Atlanta.

However, Fant has permission from his company to speak any Sunday that he finds "an open door," and during the summer is given a leave of absence for several months to conduct revival meetings.

In 1911, when Bill Minor and his gang held up the Southern special near White Sulphur, it was Dave Fant who was at the helm of the waylaid train and it was he who appeared as principal witness at the trial. If the engineer could not bend back the weapons of the train robbers, he was able to move the hardened men to tears when he visited them in jail and prayed with them. Two of the three men convicted for the train holdup died while serving their terms, the third completed his sentence and it is said Fant was the first man to bring them to penitence.

Romantic incidents have been frequent in the life of this man coming in close contact with his fellow men. But the Engineer Fant was not always the Evangelist Fant. It was only after the death of his first-born that the gospel entered vitally into his life, but that is a story close to his heart that he does not reveal.

The sermons that Fant will deliver today in the Methodist church, at Inman Yards, have a practical basis, he says, as is his custom. At 10 o'clock in the morning he will conduct a Sunday school class for men. At 11 o'clock he will speak on "An Emergency Run," giving the story of Esther and Mordecai in relation to railroad life. Again, at 7:30 o'clock tonight he will take for his subject "The Way Home," adapting the home run train allegory to Biblical passages.

TIGERS MUST FILE INCOME RETURNS, SAYS GOVERNMENT

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—Bootleggers must file income tax returns, the government asserted in a brief filed today in the supreme court in its appeal in a case from South Carolina against Manly S. Sullivan.

The circuit court of appeals decided against the government's contention in the case holding that while the revenue act seemingly taxed incomes derived from criminal transactions, it was unenforceable because congress had not provided immunity from criminal prosecutions based on disclosures in tax returns. The court stated that the constitutional protection against self-incrimination furnished a complete defense for those who failed to file income tax returns on that ground.

In its brief, the government declared, however, that a bootlegger in filing an income tax return on profits from his business would be compelled to make no incriminating disclosures and further that protection against self-incrimination does not apply to tax returns, which are required by law, and must be made irrespective of any constitutional guarantees along that line.

Time Takes Away The Sins of the World

BY ROBERT QUILLEN.

Society appears to have done its full duty in the matter of reforming mankind. Through a thousand agencies it has defined right and wrong. It can do no more.

A man of the highest type the race has developed will not strike his child in the face with a club, nor will he lie in wait and shoot another man who carries a large sum of money.

He may be angry at his child and he may covet money, but he will not beat the one or steal the other. The thing that restrains him is not the knowledge that these things are wrong, but the fact that he is a gentleman—that is, a gentle man instead of a brute man.

It is not by an exercise of will that he refrains from doing these evils; he has outgrown the urge to do them.

A man of a lower type who does these things is not ignorant of the fact that he is doing wrong. He does wrong deliberately and in many cases without compunction. He follows the urge of his brute instincts.

Society, observing that many men do evil, feels that it has not done its full duty, and exerts itself to establish more and more agencies to define right and wrong.

So long as its definitions are correct, such activity is harmless. If it accomplishes no other purpose, at least it soothes society's conscience.

But defining right and wrong though it be done a thousand times ten thousand times, cannot eradicate the brute nature of a brute man.

Gentle folk are not a product of definitions. They are a product of breeding—which is to say, a product of evolution.

The "criminal class" of today is, in all probability, greatly superior in morality and intellect to the highest type men of the stone age.

If this is true, it is not unreasonable to suppose that another hundred thousand years will find the lowest class superior in all ways to the best our day has to offer.

Let society make its definitions and rest content. Time is doing its work well.

El Dorado, Ark., April 9.—(AP)—Four persons, a father and his three daughters between the ages of 6 and 10, lost their lives in the swirling waters of Smackover creek, swollen by recent heavy rains, in attempting to cross the stream on a narrow board walk late today, 15 miles north of El Dorado. The bodies had not been recovered late tonight.

Leaders in Fundamentalist Circles Will Speak Here During Meeting May 1-8

Darwinian Theory Will Be Point To Be Attacked by Verbal Guns of Many Notables.

James Bowron, of Birmingham, Ala., president of the Gulf Steel company, will talk on evolution from the business man's point of view at the ninth annual convention of the World's Christian Fundamentalist association in Atlanta May 1-8, it was announced Saturday.

Verbal guns of a number of prominent ministers, scientists, educators, statesmen and business men will be turned upon evolution and modernism in the eight-day convention, with the prospect that a feature of the convention will be a debate between Clarence Darrow, nationally known liberal thinker, who was prominent in the famous Tennessee evolution trial, and the Rev. W. B. Riley, founder and president of the association.

One of the principal objects of the convention will be further unification of all forces opposed to what the association terms the "menace of modernism." Between 4,000 and 6,000 persons are expected to attend the sessions, churches throughout the land having been invited to send representatives. The meetings will be brought to a close with a gigantic mass meeting on Sunday night, May 8, at the auditorium.

Darwinian Theory Hit.

Weaknesses in the Darwinian theory will be pointed out by scientists who have refused to accept the evolutionary hypothesis, and leading educators will describe results of modernism in the universities and colleges, while ministers will relate their experiences in the church. Many fundamentalists hold the belief that the recent epidemic of student suicides resulted from modernistic teachings in institutions of learning, a standing committee having prepared a report on this subject.

Dr. Marion McH. Hull, prominent Atlanta layman and a director of the association, said that the program has been arranged with the purpose in view of presenting a clear idea of the fundamentalist position rather than conducting an attack on modernism, fundamentalists in many walks of life having been busily engaged in gathering facts in support of their conviction that the divinity of Christ and the inspiration of the scriptures, the old established religious beliefs, are necessary for the well-being, prosperity and progress of the country.

Notables on Program.

Among those on the program of the convention are the Rev. Robert Dick Wilson, of Princeton; Canon F. E. Howitt, of Hamilton, Ont.; the Rev. P. W. Philpot, pastor of the Moody church, Chicago; the Rev. Paul Reed, president of the Bryan league; Dr. J. D. Eggleston, president of Hampden-Sidney college; Governor-elect L. G. Hardman, of Georgia, and Dr. J. S. Luckey, president of Houghton college.

Arrangements for the convention are being handled by a local committee of 20 ministers and laymen, representing all evangelical denominations, under the chairmanship of Eugene Galloway.

SACCO-VANZETTI PLAN NEW FIGHT

States supreme court, or the president of the United States.

As Judge Webster Thayer, before whom they were convicted in 1921, passed sentence in the heavily-guarded courtroom, the word started on its way by telegraph and cable through America and to European and South American countries:

"Sacco and Vanzetti must die."

In Massachusetts and in American governmental centers in many parts of the world, precautions to guard against disorders or demonstrations quickly followed. Appeals to save the condemned began to reach the governor and other officials of Boston, from at home and abroad.

The Sacco-Vanzetti case is in its last days of exciting drama.

What the reaction finally would be no one could predict tonight, but during the six years that Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers have fought to save them, charging they were the victims of the "red" scare of 1920 and 1921, demonstrations, riots and bombings occurred abroad to reveal the feeling the case has aroused.

Many Messages.

Today brought to Governor Fuller's office many more telegrams and letters, demanding clemency for the doomed men. Cablegrams were received from several European countries Friday but the latest batch of protests included none from abroad.

Though state authorities belittle the suggestion that reprisals might follow imposition of the long-deferred death sentences, they have taken extraordinary precautions.

Judge Thayer, District Attorney Winfield M. Wilbar, of Norfolk county, supreme court justices and other officials connected with the case are being guarded, and tonight, even the entire state house force of 23 watchmen was assigned to double duty over the week-end.

There had been nothing in the way of a demonstration, however, and authorities said they anticipated no trouble.

Lawyers for the defense today made the first official comment on the case since the recent decision of the state supreme court, denying Sacco and Vanzetti a new trial.

Statement By Lawyers.

The statement, issued by William G. Thompson and Herbert B. Ehrmann, said:

"So long as we remain counsel for Sacco and Vanzetti, we are unwilling to advocate their cause in the newspapers or elsewhere than before an appropriate tribunal, whether the courts or the governor and council. To satisfy, however, the legitimate interest of the many friends and supporters of the defendants we think we may properly say that in view of the tone and substance of the recent opinion of the supreme court we are convinced that Sacco and Vanzetti can derive no benefit from any further proceedings in the courts of Massachusetts. Our clients have instructed us not to institute any proceedings which, for any purpose except delay, would in our opinion be futile, and in no event would we do so."

Tragic Court Scene.

What was perhaps the most appealing and tragic court scene in state history was enacted today, when Sacco and Vanzetti, almost unknown mill hands under murder charges brought them world-wide notoriety, pleaded with the judge who had steadfastly refused them a new trial.

In a voice choked with emotion, Sacco addressed the court for several minutes in broken English, pleading his own cause and that of his "comrade."

"I never know, never heard, even read in history anything as cruel as this court," he said.

"After seven years prosecuting they still consider us guilty.

"I know the sentence will be between two class, the oppressed class and the rich class. You persecute the people, tyrannize over them and kill them. We try the education of people always. You try to put a path between us and some other nationality that hates each other. That is why I am here today for having been the oppressed class. Well, you are the oppressor.

Persecution Charged.

"You know it, Judge Thayer. You know all my life, you know why I have been here, and after seven years, that you have been persecuting me and my poor wife, and you still today sentence us to death. I would like to tell all my life, but what is the use? You know all about what I say before, and my friend that is my comrade will be talking, because he is more familiar with the language, and I will give him a chance. My comrade, the kind man to all the children, you sentence him two times, in the Bridgewater case and the Dedham case, connected with me, and you know he is innocent.

"You forget all this population that has been with us for seven years, to sympathize and give us all their energy and all their kindness. You do not care for them. Among that peoples and the comrades and the working class there is a big legion of intellectual people which have been with us for seven years, but to not commit the iniquitous sentence, but still the court goes ahead. And I think I thank you all, you peoples, my comrades who have been with me for seven years, with the Sacco-Vanzetti case."

Sentence Pronounced.

Turning to Vanzetti, Judge Thayer in a calm and evenly modulated voice began to intone the death sentence. As Vanzetti heard the dreaded words he jumped to his feet and exclaimed: "I have something to say!"

Without raising his voice, Judge Thayer motioned him down, saying "I believe I can pronounce the sentence of the court." Vanzetti subsided, but Sacco interrupted.

"You know I am innocent," he shouted. "You condemn two innocent men."

Unperturbed by the interruptions, Judge Thayer sentenced the two men to the chair.

Vanzetti's Address.

Vanzetti, in his prison cell, had prepared for the hour when he should hear his doom. When the judge asked him if he had anything to say, the defendant rose, and, producing copious notes, delivered a remarkable address that held the crowded courtroom almost spellbound for 45 minutes.

"What I say is that I am innocent," he began. "In all my life I have never stole and I have never killed and I have never spilled blood. Not only am I innocent, but I have struggled all my life, since I began to reason, to eliminate crime from the earth.

"Everybody that knows these two arms knows very well that I did not need to go in between the street and kill a man to take the money. I can live with my two arms and live well. But besides that, I can live even without work with my arm for other people. I have had plenty to live independently and to live what the world conceives to be a higher life than not to gain our bread with the sweat of our brow.

"Is it possible that only a few on the jury are right against the whole world. It is wrong and I know it is wrong? You see, it is seven years that we were in jail. What we have suffered during these seven years no human tongue can say, and yet you see me before you, not trembling, you see me looking you in your eyes straight, not blushing, not changing color, not ashamed nor in fear.

Quotes Eugene Debs.

"Eugene Debs says that not even a dog—something like that—not even a dog that kills chickens would have been found guilty by American jury with the evidence that the commonwealth have produced against us. I say that not even a leprous dog would have his appeal refused.

"We know that you have shaken yourself (Judge Thayer) and have spoke your hostility against us, and your despisement against us with friends of yours on the train, on the University Club of Boston, on the golf club of Worcester, Mass. I am sure that if the people who know all what you say against us would have the civil courage to take the stand, maybe your honor—I am sorry to say this because you are an old man, and I have an old father—but maybe you would be beside us in good justice at this time.

"We were tried during a time that has now passed into history. I mean by that, a time when there was a hysteria of resentment and hate against the people of our principles, against the foreigner, against slackers, and it seems to me—rather, I am positive of it, that both you and Mr. Katzmann (who prosecuted the case) have done all that it was in your power to do in order to work out, in order to agitate still more the passion of the juror, the prejudice of the juror, against us.

"This is what I say: I would not wish to a dog or to a snake, to the most low and misfortunate creature of the earth—I would not wish to any of them what I have had to suffer for things that I am not guilty of. But my conviction is that I have suffered for things that I am guilty of: I am suffering because I am a radical and indeed I am a radical; I have suffered because I was an Italian, and indeed I am an Italian; I have suffered more for my family and for my beloved than for myself; but am so convinced to be right that if you could execute me two times, and if I could be reborn two other times, I would live again to do what I already have done."

SACCO-VANZETTI CASE STIRS WORLD INTEREST.

Dedham, Mass., April 9.—(United News.)—The Sacco-Vanzetti case, with all its amazing ramifications, harks back to a day just seven years ago next Friday, when Frederick Parmenter, paymaster, and Alexander Berardelli, pay roll guard, were shot and killed in a $15,776 hold-up at South Braintree, Mass., near here.

Three weeks later the Sacco and Vanzetti trial opened before Judge Thayer in court here May 31, 1921.

The two were convicted of first degree murder on July 14, 1921. Their counsel immediately filed motion for new trial, but this was denied.

The case first assumed international aspects on October 3, 1921, when a protest meeting was held at Milan, Italy. A bomb that exploded in the Paris home of Ambassador Herrick two weeks later was believed the work of Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers.

On October 21 of that year a Paris protest meeting ended in a riot, twenty persons were injured by a grenade explosion, the American consulate at Brest was stoned, a French appeal was made to President Harding for release of the prisoners and demonstrations occurred at the American embassies in London and Rio de Janeiro.

The following day the American embassy in Rome was guarded. A new trial for Sacco and Vanzetti was demanded by the Italian press.

During the next five weeks, bombs were thrown in Marseilles and Lisbon while protest meetings were being held.

Protest meetings also were held in Switzerland, Sweden, Netherlands, Argentina, Peru, Cuba, Denmark, Mexico, Uruguay, and in Chicago and Philadelphia.

Sacco and Vanzetti were denied a new trial for the second time by Judge Webster Thayer on December 24, 1921. Four months later, the defendants appealed for a new trial on witnesses' repudiation of testimony. Illness of Judge Thayer resulted in several delays, but in October, 1924, he again denied motion for a new trial.

Subsequent appeals to the state supreme court also failed, and with that court's most recent decision, denying a new trial, it appeared that the courts had considered the remarkable case for the last time.

Rome Is To Hear Judge Ben Lindsey Lecture Tomorrow

Rome, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—Indications from the first day's sale of tickets for the lecture of Judge Ben Lindsey, of Denver, Colo., who is to speak to Romans next Monday night, are that a large audience will be present to hear the message.

Judge Lindsey, who was procured as a speaker by the American Legion over a year ago, only delivers six speeches a year and Rome is fortunate to get the opportunity of hearing this eminent jurist.

His subject for the Rome lecture is "Why Kids Lie," and it is based on his wide experience as a judge of the juvenile court of Denver.

Battle Planned To Keep Canadian Liquor From U.S.

Washington, April 9.—Prohibition officials have begun drafting a program to combat rum running from the province of Ontario, Canada, when the liquor ban is lifted there April 15.

Reinforcements will be sent to the border patrol now guarding the boundary line against smuggling, and additional dry agents and investigators will be dispatched to cities on the division line to prevent liquor running.

Canada's anti-smuggling treaty with the United States will be used extensively to prevent organized rum trusts from making shipments into this country, information regarding supposed smuggling activities on Canadian soil will be furnished by Canadian officials to American customs officers for their guidance in making seizures.

American citizens desiring to go into Ontario to quench their thirsts will be permitted to cross the boundary at any time and there is no law against indulgence in intoxicants while on Canadian soil.

Visitors and tourists, however, cannot bring samples or stocks back into the United States, either for their friends or their own personal use.

Persons caught trying to enter the United States with a bottle or two of the contraband liquid will be fined $5 a bottle by the United States customs officers and have their "wet goods" confiscated. Should a person attempt to bring home a dozen or so bottles of liquor, United States officers will consider him a bootlegger and he will face a fine and jail sentence.

DEATH REVEALS OBSCURE WORKER WAS BARONET

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

London, April 9.—Fighting against a tragic reversal of fortune, Sir James Renals, baronet and elder son of the late Sir Joseph Renals, after a bad investment made some years ago, lived with his wife and six children in workingmen's quarter in a shabby house, struggling to provide for his family and preferring to be called plain Mr. Renals. Only his death three days ago revealed to his neighbors his quality. Sir James' life was shrouded in mystery. Becoming estranged from his family, he ran off to South Africa, fought in the Boer war, and coming back to Brighton, tried to earn a living as an advertising solicitor after he lost his fortune.

CHURCHES ARE HIT AS UNCHRISTLIKE

divorce but does oppose the causes thereof, he said. "Sometimes divorce is a safety valve," he said. "Another thing, divorce is not the greatest cause of juvenile delinquency, as is generally believed. In Denver, out of 1,178 delinquent juveniles, only five per cent were attributed to divorce and a census of the country shows a similar proportion."

Culture is what youth needs most today, the noted jurist said. "We can't ram morality down the throats of men by threats of violence," he declared. "The churches—or at least many of them—have been preaching un-Christlike theories too long. We must get back to the Word and Spirit of Christ. Today we see modern youth tearing away sham and hypocrisy, especially in the matter of sex, which, by virtue of being kept a secret, has lured many innocents to destruction through sheer ignorance."

Unmarried Men.

"Why are so many young men of between 20 and 30 unmarried? Simply because they feel as though they cannot maintain families under the present system. But does anyone believe that all those men are, so to speak, virgins? Hardly! The answer is promiscuity. Then, why isn't it more sensible to preach birth control and have these men married than it is to avoid that subject and have these many young men unmarried?"

Judge Lindsey departed for Rome, Ga., Saturday afternoon. He will speak on "Why Kids Lie," under the auspices of the Rome post, American Legion, Monday night. On April 19 the Colorado judge will return to Atlanta to speak before the chamber of commerce.

COCHRAN, TAYLOR GIVEN SENTENCES

Hooper, Sr., of Atlanta, and Boyd Moss, of Marietta, represented Cochran.

The contempt proceedings grew out of the circulation of a petition by Cochran and its presentation to the governor by his attorney in which the removal of Sheriff Tom Sanders and County Policemen J. E. Fowler and "Dock" Williams was sought.

In the petition it was charged that these officers brutally attacked Cochran at his home on the night of March 12. The officers denied the charges. It also was stated that Cochran was "forced" to go to trial by Judge Wood on a charge of having whisky in his possession and further that the grand jury of Cobb county had refused to make an investigation of Cochran's charge that he was attacked by the officers.

These charges formed the basis of the contempt of court proceedings cited by Judge Wood.

Cochran claimed that the attack was made on him as a result of his inquiry concerning $32 which he said the officers took from him when he was arrested two days previously on the liquor charge.

About two hours were consumed in the hearing during which about 10 witnesses were examined and copies of the petition were submitted.

Members of the grand jury in question testified that Cochran had failed to produce sufficient evidence before that body on which a true bill could be returned in the matter involving the sheriff and the two county policemen.

Cochran was placed in jail immediately after sentence was pronounced.

Governor Walker announced several days ago that the governor is not vested with authority to remove such officers and that he was not empowered to act on the paper.

SOUL MATES HELD IN LOCAL HOTEL

hell and no matter what may come into our lives together will you swear with your blood always to remain true to me? If so, sign below and I will do the same which binds you to me body and soul.

(Signed) "HAZEL HUDSON,
"EARL H. MURRAY."

Hazel Hudson was the woman's name, it was learned.

According to the story told by the woman to Detectives C. G. Hughes, C. C. Harper and J. W. Wallace, her husband in Tampa treated her cruelly. She said she became infatuated with Murray. Hence the journey to Atlanta—in her husband's automobile.

"He forced me to marry him and I could not learn to love him," she said.

Murray, who said he is also "handicapped" with a wife in Memphis, was going to that city to earn enough money as a chef to finance the two proposed divorces.

Pending advices from Tampa, the pair will remain in jail, officers said.

WOMAN BANK CASHIER ENDS LIFE WITH SHOT

"Macbeth" Splendid Finish To Week of Shakespeare

Whatever beauty of thought or euphony of sound may be contained in the eternal lines, "If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere well it were done quickly," so intelligently uttered by Robert Mantell, as Macbeth in the Saturday night performance at the Erlanger theater, when the realization dawned with the dropping of the final curtain that the week's repertoire 'twere done all too quickly, those words became less tasteful.

From all appearances Atlanta devoured with greed all the offerings of Mantell's masterful company and no pepsin pill would have been necessary to digest another dish of the classic drama served by the same cast.

Mantell's rendition of the bloody role in "Macbeth" was, as usual, excellent, and all the more remarkable after playing the enervating role of Shylock just a few hours before at the matinee. But the acting of Genevieve Hamper, his able supporter, stood out above all. As Lady Macbeth she poured her heart and talent out upon the stage with the same energy that she summoned to blot out the stain of Duncan's blood.

John C. Hickey, as Duncan, was not quite the pleasing character he made Polonius on the previous night, but that was not to be expected. Bruce Adams, as Duncan's son, Malcolm, rendered a characterization that won for him thundering aplause on several occasions. John Forest enacted Banquo with credible ability and John Alexander bettered himself considerably in his portrayal of Macduff over the Claudius on Friday night.

One thing was ascertained by the week's playing of Shakesperean drama and that is that there are plenty of thrills left in the plots and scenes.

Florida Glee Club Scores in Concert At Female College

Sun-kist Florida university men put over a glee club performance Saturday night at Agnes Scott college which drew the total registration of the female institution and a fair throng of Atlantans to boot, though two other clubs have appeared here in the last fortnight and though Decatur, Ga., is six miles from the local theater district.

High lights of a program which got away on a high hat trend and later condescended to a bit of buffoonery for the under-privileged, touched on a religious number sung in sixteenth century Latin, it was alleged; piano solos from the compositions of Verdi and Liszt, rendered by Claude L. Murphree in a commanding way; negro spirituals by an ensemble of 30 voices; ukelele numbers by a young man named N. L. Williams, who had the spotlight all to himself, and a clown clog dance by "Ham" Miller.

In the language of the great majority a ukelele is just another contribution to the world's noises; but in the hands of the aforementioned Mr. Williams the muchly maligned instrument automatically went out of the nuisance class. He whipped away a "G" string and the audience never knew the difference. They stamped their heels on the floor and cheered.

"Song of the Volga Boatmen" by the club was another hit. To quote from the program, "the plaintive chant of toiling boatmen is recognized in minor key." And the stout fellows pulled together without feathering an oar.

As a whole their performance reflected a great deal of well directed preparation similar clubs throughout the south have in the Floridians a tall mark to shoot at.

The club was directed by Professor John DeBruyn and J. S. Bueno, and assisted in their presentation by the "Collegiate Serenaders," a seven-piece aggregation which had the crowd swinging in their seats to the pulse of saxophones and talking banjos.

Fire Destroys Main Building of Negro College at Forsyth

Forsyth, Ga., April 9.—(Special.) Fire of unknown origin destroyed the main building of the large A. and M. negro school here, early this afternoon. Students occupying the second floor of the structure escaped without injury, although they lost many of their possessions. The city fire department made a speedy run to the scene, but were helpless in confronting the flames because of low water pressure. The conviction that the fire started in the ceiling led authorities to suspect it started from defective wiring.

The school is one of the largest negro educational institutions of its kind in this section and consists of a number of buildings on its large campus.

W. M. Hubbard, principal of the school, was out of the city today and it was impossible to determine the exact amount of loss incurred. It is estimated, however, that damages done amounted to approximately $8,000, half of which is believed to be insured.

Atlanta To Hear Louise Hunter With Emory Club

Emory University, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—Louise Hunter, Metropolitan opera star, will sing with Emory University Glee club in its annual Atlanta performance on May 13, it is announced here. This will be the biggest performance given by the glee club this year and comparable only to the programs given in Europe last summer by the Emory singers. The program will be about equally divided between the gifted soprano of grand opera and the glee club members.

The glee club has confined its activities this year to the south. Many invitations have been received for their return to Europe, but the club has decided to remain in America this year. The performance in Atlanta on May 13 will be the only one given at home during the spring.

Last year the club made a great "hit" in three performances, assisted by Suzanne Keener, former opera star. This year "Atlanta's Sweetheart," Louise Hunter, will sing with the boys. Miss Hunter will be in Atlanta for the grand opera season and will probably remain over until time for the Emory performance.

The type of glee club songs will be along the line of negro spirituals and southern melodies. Several soloists, baritones and tenors will give the cherished old lilts, and the "calioping" and yodeling quartet will furnish diversity.

The Emory Glee club is under the direction of Dr. Malcolm H. Dewey, head of the department of romance languages at Emory. Edgar P. James, Albany, is manager.

S.A.L. Underpass Completion Is Last Link in 18-Mile Road From Heart of City to River

New Traffic Boulevard Will Cut Distance to Roswell and Open Up Picturesque Section.

When Fulton county commissioners at the May meeting authorize construction of an underpass at the Seaboard Air Line railway on North Side drive, and other improvements already authorized are completed, an unbroken 18-mile paved road from the Piedmont hotel to the Chattahoochee river will have been completed, thus creating a great traffic boulevard from the very heart of Atlanta to the northern section of the county, and through the site of the proposed Peachtree Creek Battle Memorial park.

Bids for the underpass already have been opened but the contract award will be held in abeyance until the May session of the commission, it was announced by members of that body.

The entire route is paved or is being paved, with the exception of about two miles, three small stretches, from Peachtree Battle avenue to the bridge over Peachtree creek and south from Peachtree creek about half a mile and another extending for about a mile from Collier road to Bishop street.

Roswell Distance Cut.

When the new development is completed the route to Roswell will be shortened about two miles, and citizens of Atlanta will have access to one of the most picturesque and historic sections of Fulton county and north Georgia.

There is a short stretch between Mount Perrin road and the river which is now under course of being paved, and as soon as county forces complete this they will be moved to the stretch just north of the newly constructed bridge to pave it, and then the unpaved strip south of the bridge will be pushed to completion. This will leave only about a mile of unpaved road and one railroad crossing to be cared for, it was announced Saturday by H. N. Hurt, county engineer. Paving will be done just as soon as is practicable and tentative plans of the city construction department contemplate construction of an underpass under the Southern railway tracks.

This will complete paving and elimination of dangerous railway crossings for the entire distance and when the city completes widening and regrading of Luckie street from Bartow street to North avenue, will offer one of the most beautiful drives in the country and will be almost a straight line from the heart of the city to the river.

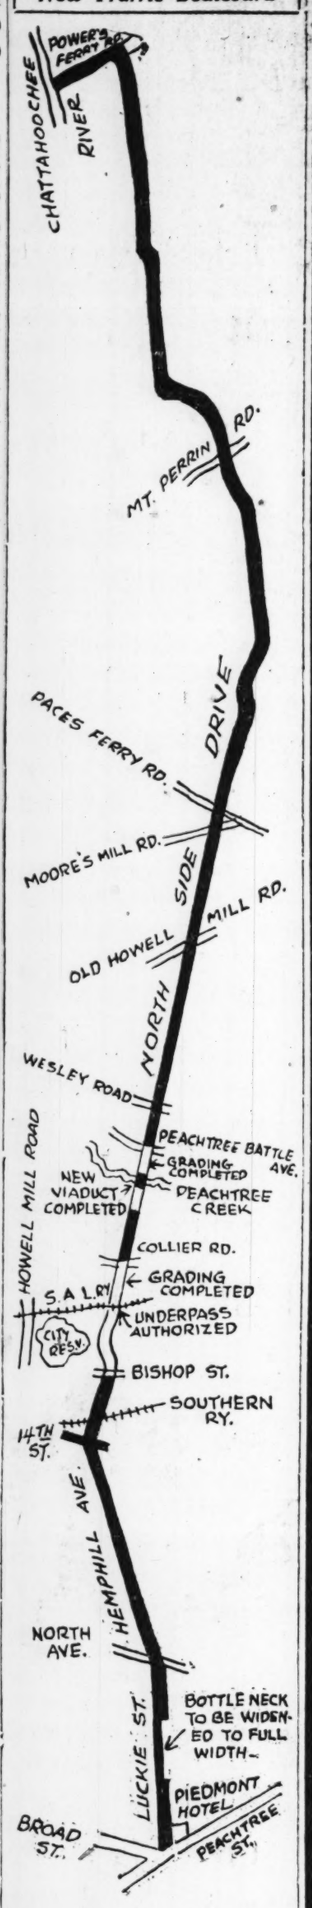

Expenses Divided.

The city of Atlanta and Fulton county have joined in sharing expenses of the widening of Luckie street and thus relieving congested traffic conditions in that section of the city. It is estimated that the cost of the entire Luckie street improvement will be about $300,000.

In addition to widening and repaving and regrading of Luckie, the city water department will lay a new 36-inch water main down the street and will begin work on it within the next few days. This will be the opening wedge of the Luckie improvement, and the city and county will push the work just as the water department forces get far enough ahead to permit it.

In addition to passing through sites of unusual historic interest the new thoroughfare leads to some of the richest developments of Fulton county and north Georgia. Many Atlantans have constructed palatial homes in this vicinity.

New Traffic Boulevard

Heavy black lines in the above drawing show paved stretches of the Piedmont Hotel-Chattahoochee River road, which will be one of the most extensive highway developments in Fulton county when completed and materially shorten the distance from the heart of the Atlanta business district to Roswell. There will be 18 miles of paved road almost in a straight line when work already contemplated is completed. White breaks in the map show unpaved stretches. The county board is now developing plans to pave the stretches left and at the next meeting will award a contract for construction of an underpass under the S. A. L. railroad. The only other crossing is at the Southern railway near the city limits and officials say that this will be the next step taken.

WEAF TO GIVE "STABAT MATER" FRIDAY NIGHT

In observance of Good Friday, the National Broadcasting company will present a tabloid version of Rossini's cantata "Stabat Mater," with special soloists and an orchestra under the direction of Cesare Sodero, through WEAF and associated stations of the Red Network of the National Broadcasting company, on Friday evening, April 15, at 9:30 o'clock, Central time. The soloists will be Adele Parkhurst, soprano; Frances Paperte, mezzo soprano; George O'Brien, tenor and Jack Oakley basso.

"The Stabat Mater" is the old hymn of the Crucifixion scene used by the Roman church in Holy Week. The words are ascribed to Jacopone, a Franciscan monk of the thirteenth century. Rossini, Pergolesi and Palestrina each wrote an impressive musical setting to the Latin words. Other compositions have likewise been written for musical settings but with less success. While Rossini's setting was written in 1832, it was not publicly performed until 1842.

A brilliant prelude leads to the opening chorus "Stabat Mater Dolorosa" arranged for soli and chorus in dramatic mood. The tenor solo, "Cujus Aniveram," is a clear-cut melody free from ornamentation. The climax of the work is reached in the "Inflammatus," a brilliant soprano obligato with choral accompaniment.

This program will be broadcast by WEAF, WRC, WGY, KSD.

HEIR TO SINGER MILLIONS ACCUSED

West Palm Beach, Fla., April 9.—(AP)—Paris E. Singer, of New York and Palm Beach, developer of Palm Beach Ocean, a subdivision here, left for New York today under $20,000 bond following his arrest last night on charges of obtaining $1,500,000 under false pretense.

Singer, as head of the Palm Beach Ocean company, was alleged to have misrepresented facts about the financial conditions of the company and to have made false promises of intended improvements to induce persons to buy land at Palm Beach Ocean.

Singer was arrested at 8 o'clock last night at the fashionable Everglades club, at Palm Beach, of which he was the founder. He was preparing to leave by train. He was held under custody at his apartment until bond could be arranged and left at 9 o'clock for New York.

The affidavit on which the warrant for Singer was issued was sworn by Paul I. Majeswki, West Palm Beach advertising man.

Singer, as president of Palm Beach Ocean Realty company, was alleged, in the affidavit on which the warrant was issued, to have combined and conspired with Thomas S. Turner, sales director of the Palm Beach Ocean Realty company, to defraud the general public of Palm Beach county.

According to the affidavit, Paris E. Singer and Thomas S. Turner, represented in newspapers of West Palm Beach and Florida, that the Palm Beach Ocean Realty company owned a certain tract of land (known as Palm Beach Ocean), was in sound financial condition and promised certain extensive developments in order to induce the general public to buy land in the development. The affidavit further alleged that Singer and Turner knew these statesements were untrue and that under false pretenses obtained $1,500,000 from purchasers of Palm Beach Ocean property.

Singer is heir to the Singer Sewing Machine millions and has been an outstanding figure in Palm Beach social life for a number of seasons.

A number of civil suits for recession of contracts are now pending against Singer in Palm Beach circuit court.

A preliminary hearing on the criminal charges was scheduled this morning for 10 o'clock a. m. April 29.

SEWING MACHINE MAGNATE'S SON.

New York, April 9.—(AP)—Paris Singer, who was arrested in West Palm Beach, Fla., last night on charges of obtaining $1,500,000 under false pretenses, is the son of the late Isaac Merritt Singer, founder of the Singer Sewing Machine fortune. Paris Singer spent most of his early life abroad and did not come to this country until 1906. In 1917 he went to Florida, where he built a villa and later interested himself in the Everglades club, which he is said to have run until his management was opposed by certain members.

RUSSIA BREAKS WITH CHINESE

the premises, arrested a group of Russians and about two score southern Chinese refugees. Many documents and other literature were seized.

Communist Plot Charged.

It was charged that a communist plot against the Pekin government was being fostered by those arrested. Mrs. Mildred Mitchell and Wilbur Burton, Americans, were arrested at the same time, accused of having documents bearing on the plot, but were released today.

The soviet embassy protested to General Chang Tso-lin against the raid, and the Chinese protested to Moscow against alleged communistic activities, Premier Wellington Koo charging that documents seized in the raid disclosed a soviet plot to overthrow the Pekin government.

Since the Pekin raid, Russian business houses in Tien-tsin have been raided by Chinese police, and the soviet consulate at Shanghai was picketed by municipal police under orders of the municipal council, the foreign extra-territorial governing body there.

NATIONALIST CHINA CALLS FOR APOLOGY.

BY H. FRANCIS MISSELWITZ.

Shanghai, April 9.—(United News.) Nationalist China today demanded an apology from the consular corps here for the picketing of the soviet Russian consulate by municipal police. Nationalist Foreign Commissioner Quo Taichi made the demand, stating that an apology should be made to soviet Consul Linde as well as to the Chinese authorities.

The picketing was ordered by the municipal council, whose chairman is Stirling Fessenden, an American. Police had been stationed around the consulate building and all who entered or left were subject to search. Several Americans doing police duty as volunteers were among the pickets.

Linde Makes Protest.

Consul Linde already had protested to the consular corps when the Chinese protest was sent and the corps had asked the municipal action for an explanation of its action in ordering the picketing. The situation admittedly was serious.

The nationalist foreign commissioner also said he intended to protest against British airplanes flying over Chinese territory and especially over the arsenal. He suggested that the British had sent so many soldiers to Shanghai that now they wanted to "pick a quarrel" in order to justify their show of force.

From Chefoo on the Shantung peninsula and from up the Yangtze river tonight came word of situations rapidly becoming more serious.

All British nationals have been ordered to withdraw immediately from Chefoo. At Chin-kiang, near where the British destroyer Veteran was fired on by Chinese forts today, all southern flags were reported down except the one over the customs house. At I-chang, far up river, the situation was alarming, lawlessness having its own way in the city.

Ship Answers Fire.

The Veteran was fired on 15 miles from Chin-kiang with shrapnel and rifles. The vessel replied partly demolishing the Chinese forts. None was injured aboard the Veteran and whether or not there had been Chinese casualties was not known tonight. The Chinese guns were silenced after the Veteran had been hit several times.

Japanese evacuation of Hankow was complete tonight although about 800 Japanese were aboard seven gunboats anchored in the river off that city; about 1,300 Japanese women and children were evacuated to depart for Japan.

The disturbed condition in the interior did not detract attention from the problem which has resulted from the picketing of the soviet consulate.

Chinese Protest.

"The soviet consulate general is accredited to the Chinese government," Foreign Commissioner Quo Tai-Chi said in his protest to the consular corps tonight. "And it is functioning on Chinese territory. Although the status of the international settlement has a certain legal basis arising from the unequal treaties, the sovereignty of China is still retained by China. The consuls are subject to no other laws than the laws of the Chinese government.

"This unwarranted and arbitrary action was not only a breach of international law, but violated China's sovereign rights. We hold the consular body responsible for the municipal council's ordering a cordon around the soviet consulate general at Shanghai, and we demand an apology to us and to the soviet consul general for it."

Quo added that he intended to protest against the flying of British airplanes over Chinese territory and especially over the arsenal.

"The British seem to be picking a quaarrel," he said, "We do not desire a quarrel. We are seeking a sane, peaceful settlement of a difficult situation, some men doubtless are itching to fight. We fear that the British, having sent so many troops must pick a fight to justify their sending such a great force here.

"The situation daily grows worse. We do not want to fight. Above all else, we desire a peaceful settlement of the problems."

AMERICA PREPARING PROTEST TO CHINA.

Washington, April 9.—(United News.)—The United States, moving rapidly to meet the growing Chinese crisis, with its threats against American lives and interests, acted along three lines today:

1. Preparations were rushed for dispatch of 1,550 additional marines from the Pacific coast to follow the sixth regiment which sailed yesterday from San Diego.

2. Minister MacMurray in Pekin was authorized to complete negotiations with ministers of Great Britain and Japan—and if possible with France and Italy—for identic notes of protest to the nationalists against the Nanking anti-foreign outrages and demands for future safety guarantees.

Evacuation Begins.

3. With American evacuation of the vast Yangtze valley area almost complete, evacuation of women and children was begun in the Pekin district.

President Coolidge hopes the American forces—soon, expected to reach 10,000, will be sufficient to protect American refugees at the two concentration points, Tien-tsin and Shanghai.

But because of crowded housing conditions at the concentration ports, the government is advising missionary boards here to bring missionary refugees home as rapidly as possible. To facilitate this exodus, the U. S. shipping board granted permission to the Dollar S. S. line to change its regular Pacific sailings to handle quickly the largest possible refugee traffic direct from China to the United States.

CANTONESE MEET SERIOUS REVERSES.

Shanghai, April 9.—(AP)—Serious reverses were reported today to have been met by a Cantonese (Nationalist) expedition up the Grand canal at the hands of reorganized remnants of the army of Marshal Sun Chuan-Fang, which originally held Shanghai.

Meagre wireless messages from Chinkiang, about 40 miles east of Nanking at the junction of the Grand canal and the Yangtse river, indicate that the Cantonese were being driven back steadily toward the Yangtse.

The Northern forces were reported to have already reached Yangchow, just north of the Yangtse from Chinkiang, with outposts as far south as the confluence of the Grand canal and the Yangtse. Hundreds of Cantonese wounded were being brought across the Yangtse to Chinkiang, where it was reported the Nationalist flag had already been hauled down.

About 1,300 Japanese mostly women and children, arrived in Shanghai this morning from Hankow. They will proceed to Japan. Eight hundred Japanese are still in Hankow, mostly men. The Japanese evacuation of Hankow was started early in the week.

(Marshal Sun Chuang-fang's defense of Shanghai collapsed late in February, after which his soldiers were sent by sea to north Kiangsu, the province in which Shanghai is located. General Chang Tsung-chang then threw his Shantungese forces against the Cantonese south of Shanghai, but they could not stem the Cantonese advance, and the prize city fell into the hands of the southern generalissimi, Chaing Kai-shek, on March 21.)

BY RANDALL GOULD.

Pekin, April 9.—(United News.)—Panicky apprehension stirred the American colony today and although the authorities insisted that there was no reason to expect a repetition of the Nanking outrage, many American women were leaving Pekin, ostensibly for vacations in Japan or Korea.

It was understood that Mrs. John V. A. MacMurray, wife of the United States minister, would leave with her children next week. No evacuation order had been given, but it was believed that many wives of persons attached to the United States legation soon would depart.

One of the sensational events of the week ended in anti-climax today when Mrs. Mildred Mitchell, of San Francisco and Honolulu, and Wilbur Burton, of Columbus, Ohio, were released from custody of Chinese police upon demand of the United States legation. Burton and Mrs. Mitchell were seized by the Chinese Tuesday, the police alleging they had engaged in anti-government activities and especially in nationalist propaganda.

Both Burton and Mrs. Mitchell were bitter over their detention. Mrs. Mitchell said she had suffered indignities.

"During the grilling on the first evening after our detention," said Mrs. Mitchell, "a representative of the American legation directly questioned me, not interpreting for the police as his duty required. It was only on the direct demand of this representative that I submitted to the humility of being stripped naked and searched by Chinese matrons. I now understand that this was a highly irregular procedure.

"My information is that the legation at no time had any evidence warranting our illegal detention for four days without any legal processes. The legation still lacks such evidence, which is why we are free."

MARINES WILL SAIL ON PRESIDENT GRANT.

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—The third group of 1,500 marines to reinforce American forces in China will sail from San Diego on April 12 or as soon thereafter as possible aboard the Dollar line steamer, President Grant. The marines are now en route to that port.

Announcement of arrangements for their depauture came today while Americans in northern China began concentrating at Pekin and Tien-tsin and as Minister MacMurray and other Pekin diplomats continued consideration of their course in demanding reparations for mistreatment of foreigners by Cantonese nationalist troops.

The President Grant, employed because neither the navy nor army has transports available, will take the entire 1,500 marines and their equipment. It is hoped by the navy department that equipment left behind by the second marine contingent when it sailed a few days ago also may be stowed aboard the President Grant. Six observation airplanes comprised most of them were en route to the place could be found on the transport Henderson.

DENY DR. WILLIAMS CARRIED REVOLVER.

Shanghai, April 9.—(AP)—Allegations that Dr. J. E. Williams, vice president of Nanking university, had a revolver in his hand when he was killed in the anti-foreign outbreak at Nanking March 24, are false, Dr A. J. Bowen, president of the university, told the Associated Press today. Dr. Bowen, who formerly resided at Kankakee, Ill., but has spent 30 years in China, was an eye-witness of the slaying of Dr. Williams.

"Dr. Williams had no weapon of any kind," declared Dr. Bowen. "I don't believe he ever owned a gun in his life and he did not know how to use one, if he had."

Dr. Bowen described in detail how seven or eight Cantonese soldiers rounded up a group og six Americans on Nanking university campus.

"They first searched us thoroughly for weapons," he recalled. "They found none. Then they lined us up and began to take our watches and go through our pockets for money. I pulled out my $2 watch and gave it to my searchers.

"Another was taking Dr. Williams watch. Dr. Williams was arguing mildly in Chinese, saying 'You don't want that,' when his searcher or another soldier standing by shot Dr. Williams in the head with a rifle at close range."

The statement that Dr. Williams was drawing a revolver when he was shot was contained in a dispatch from G. A. Kennedy at Shanghai to The Nation of New York.

PRESBYTERIANS REFUSE TO ACCEPT INDEMNITY.

New York, April 9.—(AP)—The Presbyterian board of foreign missions announced today its refusal to accept any possible indemnity from the government of China for the killing of the Rev. Dr. John E. Williams, slain at Nanking on March 24.

"The board of missions has never requested nor accepted indemnity in the case of any missionary," the report states. "And in the case of Dr. Williams, the board sould adhere to this long established and historic practice."

It was pointed out that Dr. Williams was a regularly appointed missionary and since the board and the enterprise which it represents will be affected indirectly by any claims for indemnity on account of his death, the former policy of refusal to make claims would be followed in this case.

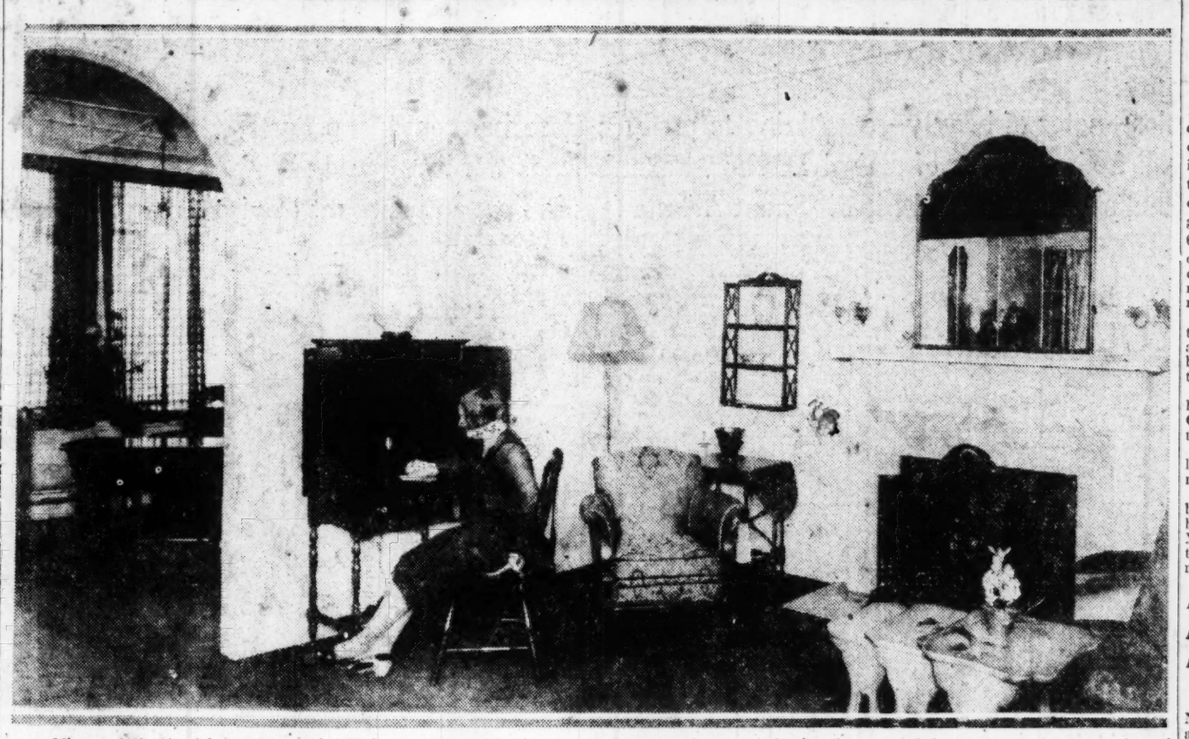

SOVIET CONSULATE IS STILL PICKETED.

BY JOHN POWELL.

Shanghai, April 9.—Despite the protest of the soviet consul general, Wilhelm Linde, and the Chinese commissioner of foreign affairs, Quo Taichi, and the Shanghai consular body, the Shanghai municipal council today is defying them and is continuing to picket the soviet consulate, virtually holding the entire staff prisoner within the building. Since all the members of the soviet consular staff unanimously refuse to submit to a search, no one has left the building since Wednesday afternoon.

The Shanghai consular body, including the American consul general, Clarence Gauss, met today under the chairmanship of Mr. Maall, the Norwegian consul, and, according to an unofficial report, decided to demand an explanation of the Shanghai municipal council's action in picketing the soviet consulate without the authority of the consular body.

Perfect Home at Chamberlin's Enables Patrons To Visualize Effect of Their Furniture Purchases

View of the inviting and restful living room, with the sunparlor opening at left, in the model bungalow constructed and ideally appointed in the furniture department of the Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose company, which is now conducting a friend-making sale under direction of Wiley Jones, manager.

All that's needed is a bride in a gingham apron waving her hand at the doorway, with possibly a pink rose in bloom above.

Then the bungalow—the model bungalow—which Wiley Jones, manager of the furniture department of Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose company, has installed, might serve as a real home to which Mr. Jones might invite his friends to tea and muffins, with small talk of the theater and the dinner-dance at your service. That's how effective it is.

But the public is fortunate in that Mr. Jones' business isn't the theater and the dinner-dance. He doesn't deal in tea and muffins and small talk, but he is known as one of the foremost artists in furniture the south has ever known. He can get effects in groupings of walnuts or mahoganies or maple that many painters can't attain with brush and canvas; he can secure effects in tapestries and brocades and cretonnes that many a symphony conductor can't get with his baton.

Just now this master in furniture is offering Atlanta what he declares to be his most beautiful stock. In addition he's offering it in his spring sale at prices that have proved astonishing, to say the least, to those who called to see him last week.

The Perfect Home.

And with the aid of his perfect bungalow he has arranged it so that his patrons may actually visualize the effect their purchases will have in their homes. He has decorated his model home, a structure built on the fourth floor of the Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose store, so that customers may get ideas of correct arrangement of colors and materials, and he has stocked each beautiful room with furniture of the type best suited to its kind.

From sun parlor to breakfast room the model home is completely and tastefully furnished in furniture that is neither over-expensive nor cheap, but is priced to meet the pocket-book of the average buyer. Bedrooms, living room, dining room, reception hall—each is in its separate place, ideally appointed and affording concrete illustration of the effect which furniture will produce when it is delivered into homes.

"We are pleased very greatly at the response of the public to the announcement made several days ago that Chamberlin's furniture department had inaugurated a friend-making sale, including its entire furniture stock," Mr. Jones said Saturday. "Many of our old friends have called in to see us and have honored us with a substantial continuation of their patronage. In addition, many new friends have called, and that makes us feel gratified, but we want still more to come in and look over our big stock. We want them to come in and fill their furniture needs because our price reductions for this sale have been heavy and sweeping, and they can serve their own interests best by buying now at Chamberlin's."

Seek New Accounts.

Mr. Jones' stock of new and colorful spring furniture and of home furnishings of every type and price covers the 30,000 square feet of space of the fourth floor of the well-known Whitehall street department store.

Mr. Jones says that Chamberlin's is conducting a drive to put on its books 1,000 new accounts and that his department has pledged to secure 500 of this number.

"This is strictly a friend-making selling event," he said Saturday. "It its designed to win new patrons for Chamberlin's, and it certainly will succeed in this aim if people will call in. I invite the general public to pay us a visit and look over the supreme qualities and high values we are offering at greatly reduced prices in this sale."

PEACH CROP CUT BY HEAVY DROP

Macon, Ga., April 9.—(AP)—A heavy fall of the developing peach crop during the last few days and the indications that the drop will continue in the early part of May has reduced the size of this year's probable crop considerably, according to reports of growers. A month ago a crop of 25,000 was in sight. Now the estimates of the Georgia Peach Growers' exchange is around 12,000 cars, while many growers say that the crop will not exceed 10,000 cars.

The loss is said to have been due to the freezing weather in March, after record-breaking heat which brought out the blooms far ahead of the normal period.

Reports here indicated that the losses in north Georgia and in the Carolinas would be heavier than in the middle Georgia belt.

"We look for a smaller crop than last year," said W. C. Bewley, general manager of the exchange.

First shipments of Mayflowers will be made about May 10. Uneedas will be ready for the market the last of May or the first of June, and from then on there will be a steady movement of fruit.

GIRLS WHO CROSS LEGS ARE GIVEN WORD OF WARNING

New York, April 9.—Girls who cross their legs are liable to curvature of the spine and premature old age, according to Dr. H. H. Fryette, of the Chicago college of ostepathy, who addressed the East-Osteopathic association here today.

"The short skirt permits a woman to cross her legs more easily than the old style of dust catchers. Besides, what woman would want to cross her legs with long skirts," he said. "However, when you see a pretty woman sitting comfortably in a chair, exposing a generous display of trim hosiery, she is unconsciously flirting with curvature of the spine."

Dr. Fryette explained that when a woman, or a man sits with crossed legs, a twisting pressure is brought on the base of the spine, affecting the nerves.

COLONEL CALLED FROM NICARAGUA

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—The single fact that Lieutenant Colonel Edward Davis, American military attache at Mexico City, has been summoned to Washington on a confidential mission was allowed to slip today through the barriers of official silence erected against the multiplying stories of forged documents, stolen archives, and similar happenings recently in American-Mexican relations.

Having let out the fact that Colonel Davis is coming home, war department officials closed the gap so far as commenting on reports published today in a number of newspapers that it was from his office that approximately 300 official documents were stolen. They did say, however, that the department had complete confidence in the colonel and that there was nothing derogatory to him connected with the mission.

In the face of continued published various accounts of diversion of diplomatic information and insertion therein of forged sections to be given the Mexican government, the state department today continued to turn a deaf ear to inquiries as to their accuracy.

LIBERALS PURSUED BY CONSERVATIVES.

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—After decisively defeating liberal forces under General Moncada in the Tierra Azul and Muy Muy battles, Nicaraguan conservative troops have pursued the Sacasa forces into the mountains west of Tierra Azul and are engaging them along a considerable portion of the four-mile front, Rear Admiral Latimer, American commander in Nicaragua, reported today to the navy department.

Fighting was proceeding intermittently between the opposing armies in the mountains, he said, and the Diaz troops were reported to have taken up a strong position along the eastern end of the ridge which General Moncada's men hold.

EX-STILLMORE MAYOR GIVEN PRISON TERM

Savannah, Ga., April 9.—(AP)—E. A. Edenfield, former mayor of Stillmore, has been sentenced to a term of two years in the Atlanta penitentiary by Judge Barra.

The defendant went before the court to be resentenced on a charge of conspiracy to violate the national prohibition act, upon which he was convicted by a jury here nearly two years ago.

INJUNCTION HITS TENNESSEE GAS PRICE-FIXING

Nashville, April 9.—(AP)—In the United States district court this morning Judge John J. Gore issued a temporary injunction against Frank S. Hall, state commissioner of finance and taxation, L. D. Smith, attorney general and county attorney General R. M. Atkinson, restraining them from enforcing the provisions of the recent act of the legislature to regulate the fixing of gasoline prices.

The restraining order was issued on separate petitions filed by the Texas company, the Standard Oil company of Louisiana and the Pan-American Oil company.

No date has been set for a hearing.

COAL PRODUCTION IS CUT IN HALF

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—Indications that bituminous coal production was cut almost in half by the suspension of union mining on April 1 were given today in the first official government figures covering output since that date.

Telegraphic returns made public by the bureau of mines showed that the soft coal output from mines which continued to work on Friday, April 1, was 20,085 carloads, while on April 2 the total dropped to 15,521 carloads. On Friday of the previous week, when all mines were in operation, the carload output was 40,943.

On Monday, April 4, however, soft coal carloadings were 24,774, or approximately 1,300,000 tons of coal. April 5, the last day from which telegraphic returns were available, loadings declined slightly to 23,423 cars.

The drop shown on April 1 was in part due, the bureau of mines said, to the fact that this day is celebrated as a holiday generally by union miners, and a good many union mines which were in operation April 5 were closed down the previous Friday and Saturday.

ROTARIANS SELECT ATLANTA FOR 1928

Tampa, Fla., April 9.—(AP)—R. T. Arnold, Jacksonville, was nominated for district governor and Atlanta, Georgia, named the 1928 meeting place of the 39th district Rotary clubs here today. The district governor will be formally elected and installed at the National convention.

More than 1,000 delegates from Florida and Georgia are attending the meetings which opened yesterday with speeches by several national and district officials, and discussion of numerous subjects. The gatherings will continue through today.

Reports of chairman of various committees occupied today's business sessions.

An outline of the activities and progress of Rotary clubs in improving trade practices and business ethics was contained in the report of George Phillips, Columbus, Ga., chairman of the committee on business methods.

Porter Pierpont, Savannah, Ga., reported on the presidents' meeting yesterday in which he said "the success of a club can be measured by the efforts of its executive head."

The social program will be brought to a close tonight with the governor's ball.

NEWSPAPER MEN DENY CONNECTION WITH "PRESS CLUB"

Reported efforts to organize an Atlanta Press club and solicitation of certain citizens to become "honorary members" brought out Saturday that names of newspaper men which are alleged to have been used by the solicitor were used without knowledge or consent of those concerned.

Newspaper men whose names are said to have been used by the "organizer" as alleged officers of the proposed club include O. B. Keeler, of The Journal; L. G. Woodruff, of The Georgian; L. O. Moseley, of The Constitution, and others.

These reputed "officers" of the proposed club said Saturday that they had not attended any meeting and had not given permission for their names to be used in such a connection.

It is understood that prominent citizens are being asked to join as "honorary" members and are being asked in "membership cards" to subscribe to large sums as initiation fees and dues.

The picture was taken at the Wren's Nest, in West End, former home of Joel Chandler Harris.

Three Girls and 3 Boys Win Places in Oratorical Contest

In five contests held in Georgia Friday in as many districts in the fourth national oratorical contest, sponsored in this state by The Constitution, three girls and two boys were winners and with a boy having won at Cartersville last week, makes the winners of six districts equal in numbers between boys and girls.

Miss Elizabeth Heath, student of the Stillmore High school, won in the twelfth district meeting held at Dublin Friday night. In the third district contest held at Americus, Miss Mary Ella Montfort, of Fort Gaines, won first place and Fred Ingram, of Vienna, second. The subject of each was "The Constitution." In the contest in the first district held at Millen, Miss Nellie Weeks, of Millen, won first place, her subject being "The Constitution," Lee Jones, of Savannah, with the same subject, was the runnerup.

Two Boys Win.

Threatt Moore, Jr., of Jackson, was the winner in the sixth district contest held at Jackson Friday night and John Harrison, Jr., represent Lanier High school, Macon, was second. At West Point, where the fourth district meet was held Friday, Willard Harrell, member of the junior class of West Point High school, was declared winner of first place, his subject being "The Constitution." Miss Virginia Alsabrook, of LaGrange, won second place, her subject being "The Constitution."

In the contest held in the seventh district on April 1, at Cartersville, Robert Walton, of Cartersville, as previously announced, was the winner from that district.

Thus far contests have been held in six Georgia districts with six more districts yet to select winners. The fifth district meet will be held at East Point April 21, eighth at Atnens, ninth at Commerce, tenth at Warrenton on April 21 and eleventh at Brunswick, second at Tifton.

The district winners will be awarded prizes of $15 in gold each by The Constitution and they will compete in the state contest to be held in Atlanta on April 30 when a state winner will be selected. The state winner will be awarded $100 in gold and will compete in the southern zone contest to be held at Birmingham on May 6 and the winner there will compete in the national finals in Washington on May 27.

The grand prize in the United States will be a summer European tour for seven zone winners and the national winner, with all expenses paid. Randolph Leigh, of Washington, organizer and director general of the contests throughout the United States, announces.

Dr. Stewart Director.

The oratorical contest is held under the auspices of the American Bar association and is sponsored in each state in the union by a newspaper. The contest in Georgia high schools is under direction of Dr. Joseph S. Stewart, of the University of Georgia, in charge of high school extension in Georgia.

HOOVER TO OPEN AT FINAL MEET.

Washington, D. C., April 9.—(Special.)—Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce, will make the address at the final meeting of the fourth national oratorical contest to be held in the Washington auditorium on the evening of May 27.

At that event, toward which approximately 2,000,000 school boys and girls of America have been looking and working for months, the seven best speakers in the nation-wide competition will be judged by Justices Sanford, Butler, Van Devanter, Southerland and Stone, of the United States supreme court. John Hays Hammond, internationally known engineer, will introduce the contestants. The judges' decision will be announced by Randolph Leigh, organizer and director of the contest, and the handsome silver loving cup which is to go to the 1927 champion of the United States will be presented by Frank B. Noyes, chairman of the American publishers' committee for the contest.

All seven of the national finalists will secure a trip abroad with all expenses paid. The party will sail on the Leviathan on July 2, and will tour England and the continent, returning to the United States on September 17.

Finals in Washington.

The winner of the 1927 championship of the United States will represent this country in the second international oratorical contest, the finals for which will be held in Washington on October 14. The countries to be represented are England, France, Canada, Mexico, Japan, the Hawaiian Islands and the United States. The spokesmen for all of these nations will be designated not later than June 1. When the finalists for the United States sail for Cherbourg, they will be accompanied by the English, French, Canadian and Mexican champions. The Mexican champion will make the entire tour with the party from the United States. The Canadian champion will sail from Montreal but will join the speakers from the United States when they reach those countries and will return with them. The Japanese speaker, who will land at Seattle, will not reach the United States more than a week before the international finals.

At the international finals each speaker will use his native language, and will discuss his own governmental institutions. The audience at the international finals last year took a keen interest in the foreign speakers, each non-English address being printed in English to facilitate the task of following the argument, as well as the eloquence of the speakers. The Mexican speaker, using Spanish, made a tremendous impression and won second place with a speech on "Bolivar and the Latin-American Republics."

The object of the contest, which is a newspaper citizenship contribution, is, in its national aspects, to increase interest in and respect for the constitution of the United States. In its international aspects it is designed to promote better understanding between nations by means of a frank and friendly exchange of national viewpoints through the best youthful spokesman in each participating nation.

RIVER CAPTAIN IS SHOT BY WIFE

Cincinnati, April 9.—(AP)—Wiley Claude Hill, 50, captain of the Kate Adams, picturesque figure of early river days, which was destroyed by a fire a few weeks ago, and his wife, Edna, 51, lay in a hospital tonight, the victims of a new tragedy.

Hill was shot twice in the back today by his wife, who then slashed her throat with a razor. Hill, who had just returned from a visit to river boat companies seeking a new craft to captain, was making toast for his wife when she raised from her sick bed, took a revolver from beneath her pillow and shot him.

A neighbor ran into the room and aided Hill in wresting the revolver from his wife. While the neighbor was examining Hill to determine the seriousness of his wounds, Mrs. Hill stepped to a dresser and slashed her throat with a razor.

The couple came to Cincinnati last Monday after the fire at Memphis, Tenn., had left the old sidewheeler, Kate Adams, a charred wreck on the waters of the Mississippi and put Hill out of work.

Mrs. Hill had been in ill health and was afraid she would be taken back to a hospital in Memphis, the old captain told the police. As he told the story Mrs. Hill lay with his hand pressed tightly to her lips.

TO HEAR MANLEY NEW TRIAL PLEA

Definite date for hearing on the motion for a new trial for W. D. Manley, president of the defunct Bankers' Trust company, under sentence of from 9 to 10 years in the penitentiary, was set Saturday for April 23 before Judge G. H. Howard, in Fulton superior court.

The trust company head was convicted on November 20, 1926, on a charge of fraudulent insolvency in connection with the failure of the Farmers' & Traders' bank, formerly located on Peters street. He is at liberty under a $25,000 bond pending hearing on the motion which was originally set for January 8.

The hearing has been postponed several times in order that the court reporter might have sufficient time to transcribe the mass of evidence presented at the trial, which consumed more than two weeks. Announcement was made Saturday that all evidence had been transcribed and that defense counsel was prepared to present an amended motion next Saturday.

The physical condition of the bank president is said by attorneys to be serious with slight hope for his recovery. He was slated to stand trial on several other indictments resulting from the failure of the trust company and subsequent failure of 82 small banks in the chain, but trials have been postponed pending recovery from his illness.

U. S. Airplanes To Fly 575,000 Miles Per Month

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—Herbert Hoover, secretary of commerce, said today that by mid-summer regularly routed American airplanes will be flying 575,000 miles a month, within 25,000 miles of all planes operating in Europe.

Mr. Hoover is here to address the Northwestern University club and the Izaak Walton league.

"The best defense of the privately operated air transports is shown by the mileage figures," the secretary said. "Every air transport company in Europe is subsidized by its home government. We don't spend a cent for subsidies. The government, however, is spending about $4,000,000 a year for airway construction."

By mid-summer the government will have completed 9,300 miles of airways, Mr. Hoover said. Emergency fields will have been provided for this mileage and lighting for 7,200.

Within a short time, Secretary Hoover declared, more than three hours may be cut off the travel time between New York and Chicago, and 16 off the travel time between Chicago and Los Angeles. This will be brought about, he said, by combining train movement with plane transportation.

HARRY K. SLIGH TO GO ON TRIAL ON ARSON COUNT

Ocilla, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—Harry K. Sligh, charged with arson in connection with the burning of his home near here last September, a carcass found in the embers having been interred as being his, is expected to go on trial here next week, after superior court opens on Monday.

After the burning of the home and the finding of the bones supposed to have been Sligh, insurance firms with whom he was insured instituted an investigation and Sligh was arrested in California several months later.

He was returned to Georgia and is out on bond. He is charged with arson and with attempted fraud in connection with the collection of the insurance policies.

BODY OF WOMAN MISSING 12 DAYS FOUND IN LAKE

Chester, S. C., April 9.—(AP)—The veil of mystery covering the disappearance of Mrs. Gertie Goddard from her home in Great Falls, Chester county, 12 days ago, was lifted when her body was found in the large lake at Great Falls this afternoon. The dead woman was the wife of Edward Goddard, a cotton mill worker. On the morning of March 29 she left her home to call a doctor to see her sick child, according to a statement of her husband, who said he was on a night shift at the mill and did not return home until bout 5:30 a. m. Upon being told by the child that hs wife had left the house several hours before, Goddard said he began a search for her, neighbors assisting. Coroner Gladden has gone to Great Falls to conduct an inquest.

Foster Mother Held for Trial On Child's Story

New York, April 9.—(AP)—Mrs. Everett S. Pratt, of Des Moines, Iowa, was released in $500 bail for trial in special sessions on a charge of third degree assault today after a hearing in which her six-year-old adopted daughter, Roberta Jane, testified that she had been burned and beaten by her foster-mother recently in a local hotel.

Mrs. Pratt was arrested in the chambers of Magistrate Flood in West Side court and waived examination.

The decision to hold Mrs. Pratt for trial came after a hearing both in chambers and in open court.

The child told her story of the alleged cruelty, and after a maid in the hotel and others had testified briefly the hearing was suddenly adjourned to chambers where Mrs. Pratt was to give her side of the story.

EMORY LIBRARIAN HEADS STATE BODY

Savannah, Ga., April 9.—(AP)—Miss Margaret Jemison, librarian of Emory university, was elected president of the Georgia Library association at the closing meeting of the three-day convention this morning, succeeding Miss Ola M. Wyeth, of Savannah, who has headed the organization for the past year. Miss Helen Eastman, of Rome, was elected first vice president; Mrs. A. P. Lomgdon, of Griffin, second vice president, and Miss Fannie Hinton, of Atlanta, secretary and treasurer.

The nominating committee was composed of Miss Louise Smith, Miss Eva Martin and Miss Beverly Wheatcroft.

At the conclusion of the short session this morning the visitors and most of the members of the library staff drove out to Wormsloe, where the private library of Georgia history and records was thrown open to the visitors by Wymberly de Renne, the owner.

Some of the visitors left early this afternoon for a visit to Charleston before returning to their homes. Before adjourning this morning the following resolution was adopted:

"The Georgia Library association wishes to heartily indorse the proposed legislation for the establishment and maintenance of free county libraries in Georgia, a premissive bill for which is to be introduced at the 1927 session of Georgia legislators."

Paris, April 9.—(AP)—Clocks throughout France were advanced at 11 o'clock last night to midnight and summer time became effective.

Family Quarrel Ends in Suicide Attempt, Report

Following a quarrel with his wife, R. P. Cottingham, of 1708 Evans drive, penned a note asking forgiveness, walked to a porch of an adjacent house and fired a .22-calibre bullet into his chest, according to a police report early Sunday. To police, the man said the shooting was accidental.

Mrs. Cottingham had gone to the home of a neighbor, Mr. and Mrs. John Gearheart, 1704 Evans drive, after the quarrel, police said. The husband followed and failing to persuade Mrs. Cottingham to return, attempted suicide.

In the home a note was found. It read:

My Darling:

Can you ever forgive the way I acted tonight? I hope you won't think of me the way you do. Life has no charm—no hope for me, because you are cross for no reason, as you were tonight. Please think friendly of me. Tell mama it was accidental for I want her never to know about it.

Goodbye.

BOY'S PET RAT ROUTS PARADE, WOMEN FLEE

Santa Rosa, Calif., April 9.—(United News.)—A rat disorganized a parade today and sent women into hysterics while strong men shouted in alarm.

The parade was the culmination of "Be Kind to Animals week."

Hundreds of boys and girls, surrounded by pet dogs, cats, goats, monkeys and such, comprised a six-block procession. On the sides of the streets were gathered parents and onlookers.

Charles Friedman, 9, was one of the proud marchers. His fondness for animals was displayed in four or five large, white-spotted Italian rats. They were in his pockets and clambered on his shoulders.

At one of the busiest downtown intersections one of the rats leaped to the shoulders of a woman. She promptly went into hysterics, followed by every woman in sight. A wild scramble for altitude took place, and the normal peaceful scene took on the appearance of a riot.

Charles is still looking for his pet.

UNCONSCIOUS MAN BEHIND WHEEL, AUTO IS WRECKED

Baton Roug , La., April 9.—(AP)—An unconscious drive of several miles with his wife and little son as passengers, was ended near Baker last night when the automobile of Edgar Smith, Standard Oil company employee collided with another machine.

Mrs. Smith said that she had noticed nothing unusual in her husband's appearance, although she had addressed him and failed to receive a response.

His condition was discovered after the collision, in which no one was hurt. He was removed to a hospital and spent the night in an unconscious condition, recovering today.

Evangeline Booth Arrives in Atlanta To Open New Salvation Army Headquarters

BY BEN COOPER.

Her eyes sparkling with the aggressive enthusiastic spirit that has placed the devil on the run wherever the Salvation Army has flung its banners in this old world of ours, Evangeline Booth, commander of the army forces in the United States, arrived in Atlanta Saturday afternoon to inaugurate the new southern territorial staff headquarters of the organization in this city.

Commander Booth was welcomed at the Terminal station by the southern staff members and the staff band, led by Lieutenant-Commissioner William McIntyre. Greetings were exchanged between Commissioner McIntyre and the distinguished guest amid the cheers of several score Salvation army officers and workers, while the staff band played martial airs in honor of the visitor.

From the Terminal station, Commander Booth was escorted to the Biltmore hotel, where a suite of rooms were placed at her disposal by the hotel management. She is accompanied by Colonel Walter Jenkins, national secretary; Lieutenant Colonel Richard Griffiths, private secretary to the commander; Lieutenant Colonel Mrs. Brewer, Lieutenant Colonel Samson Hodges, pipe organist, and Brigadier Walter Mabee, soloist.

Inauguration Today.

Commander Booth will conduct the inauguration ceremonies for the southern territory staff at 3 o'clock this afternoon at Wesley Memorial church, and at noon Monday will speak at the flag-raising exercises in front of the new territorial headquarters on Ellis street. She will leave Monday night for Birmingham, Ala., where she will dedicate a new rescue and maternity home.

Staunchly defending the "God of our mothers and the Bible of our fathers," Miss Booth Saturday afternoon at the Biltmore declared that the Gospel is a panacea for all the ills of the world, and that the world needs to stand fast and strong, with the teachings of the "Bible, inspired work of God, in our hearts."

The woman who, in her childhood, was known as the little "White Angel," of the London slums, through her work for the unfortunate, was in reminiscent mood Saturday following her arrival in Atlanta, and to a group of newspaper representatives and southern staff members, outlined the early portions of her career, telling how she started in Salvation Army work in London at the tender age of ten years, using her voice and ability to play instruments in her work. Because she could not approach the people she wanted to reach in uniform, she went amid the slums in rags, lending a helping hand here and there, always protected by an older girl companion.

Youth Unchanged.

"Youth today is not greatly different to youth of past years," Miss Booth said. "Youth will always be youth, and if it seems to reach extremes in dress and demeanor, it is because of the example set before it, for youth is ever striving to keep in style—up to date. One extreme was when the girls' skirts dragged the grounds and they got their ankles wet from the mud on the dress hems, and now today the extreme is to wear clothes in which it is comfortable to get about.

"What youth wants is an ideal—a goal. That was proven in the great war. And now let's not confuse youth by pulling down the Bible, but let's set an example and show youth that the Bible is the one sure rock and the one strong hand to cling to."

Student Suicides.

Miss Booth's explanation for the recent epidemic of student suicides is as follows: "What has done away with savagery and barbarism, and what stopped the people of India from throwing their first born into the Ganges? The Bible, which has brought light into darkness and is the lamp of Christianity. Destroy the foundation of youth given by the Bible and it will go back to savagery and blow its brains out."

Whole hearted faith in the Word of God is the secret of the remarkable success of the Salvation Army in its world salvation program, Miss Booth said.

Speaking of her visit with President and Mrs. Coolidge on Washington's birthday, Miss Booth said that Coolidge is a ready listener when someone advances something for the good of the nation, but "chick-chatter passes over his head."

Governor's Statement.

Governor Clifford Walker, sounding the keynote of public opinion regarding the esteem in which the Salvation Army is held in Atlanta and the south in general, Saturday issued a statement lauding the activities of the organization which is soon to go to the public for a fund of $50,000.

Governor Walker's appeal to the men and women of Atlanta to get behind the effort to raise the desired amount for the Dixie headquarters of the southern territory was made public through Preston S. Arkwright, general chairman of the coming campaign.

In his statement the governor declares that not only will Atlanta benefit morally from having the new headquarters located in this city but that there will be commercial benefits accruing to the city by reason of the fact that all activities and expenditure of money by the 221 Salvation Army corps and the 49 social service institutions in the 16 southern states of the new territory will be supervised from this city, and in addition, the city has received an increased population of upwards of 200 persons in staff officers and training school cadets coming here.

S. C. SENATE KILLS SIX-CENT GAS TAX

Columbia, S. C., April 9—(AP)—The proposed six-cent tax on gasoline was overwhelmingly killed in the senate when the members, by a vote of 25 to 6, refused to table an amendment reducing the tax to 5 cents. The finance committee had estimated that the extra cent for state general purposes would yield $600,000 in revenue for the remainder of 1927.

During the discussion, Chairman Gross, of the finance committee, warned his colleagues that the session might drag on two or three weeks longer unless the senate voted in the present bill revenues adequate for the needs of the state—while Senator McColl denounced the gas levy for general purposes as one which would "kill the goose that laid the golden egg."

Following a vote striking out the tax on ice cream and milk drinks, the senate continued discussion of the committee amendments to the revenue bill with an argument over the proposed six-cent gasoline tax.

Debate on the milk tax was continued from Thursday night, Senators Hammond, Moore, Ouzts, Summers and Perry strenuously opposing the levy on the argument that it would shatter a growing industry in the state and would strike at the basic food of mankind.

An amendment appropriating $50,000 from the soft drinks revenues to provide for buildings at the State Park Tuberculosis sanitarium was also adopted.

A suggestion by Senator Williams that an extra two-mill property levy and impartial collection of property taxes would solve financial proolems was a feature of the argumnet over the gasoline tax.

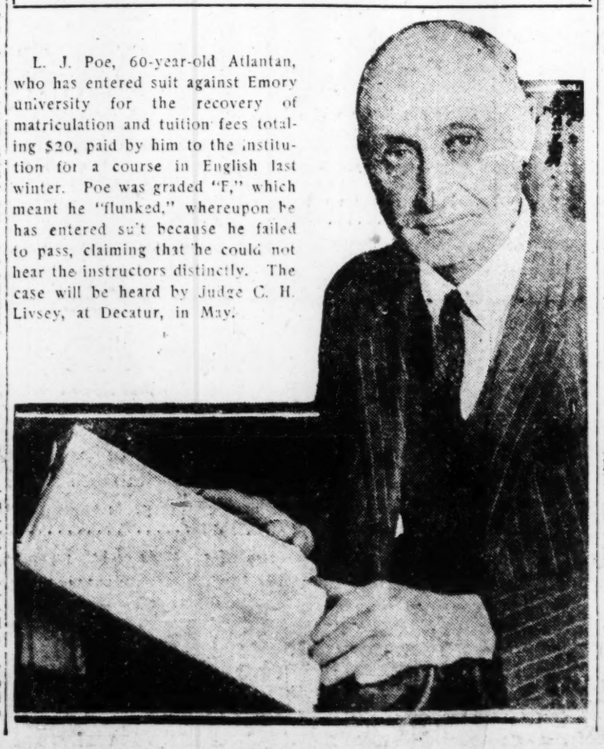

"I have no patience with the system that levies on a dish of ice cream or few cigarettes and allows a man to return for taxation a valuation of a house at $1,000 when he would not sell it for $25,000," he said.

PARALYTIC DIES OF BURNS CAUSED BY PIPE SPARK

Brunswick, Ga., April 9.—(AP)—Addie L. Owens, former chief of police, died at a local hospital last night following injuries he received yesterday afternoon when he was badly burned at his home.

Owens, who had been a paralytic for a number of years, was smoking his pipe in bed. A spark from the pipe ignited the bed clothing, and before the blaze could be extinguished he was terribly burned. The burns, together with the shock, caused his death.

Poe, 60-year-old Atlantan, who has entered suit against Emory university for the recovery of matriculation and tuition fees totaling $20, paid by him to the institution for a course in English last winter. Poe was graded "F," which meant he "flunked," whereupon he has entered suit because he failed to pass, claiming that he could not hear the instructors distinctly. The case will be heard by Judge C. H. Livsey, at Decatur, in May.

RADIO RECIPROCITY PROPOSAL BLOCKED

Ottawa, Ont., April 9.—(AP)—Possibility of reciprocity between United States and Canada to control radio broadcasting in North America was deadlocked today when the house of commons was told by the minister of marine and fisheries of the dominion's need for exclusive control of 12 high power stations, with partial control of an additional fourteen stations.

The Federal Radio Commission at Washington has conceded to give the Canadians exclusive control of six high-power stations, with part control of six others, but the Canadians have not departed from their original demand for exclusive control of 12 stations, and part rights in 14 more. In a conference held at Washington the Canadians definitely outlined their demands, but negotiations were suddenly dropped off without settlement.

BANDITS ESCAPE WITH $15,000 GOLD

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—Fifteen masked and armed men held up four employees of the Illinois Watch Case company plant at Elgin, Ills., early today, ransacked the vault and several smaller safes and escaped in four automobiles with gold, the value of which is estimated at $15,000.

Three of the workers were bound and gagged and placed inside the vault. The fourth man was compelled at the point of a revolver to make his usual rounds and ring call boxes, to prevent police learning that anything was wrong at the plant.

The robbers, armed with rifles, machine guns and revolvers, entered the plant at midnight and remained three hours. The engineer, fireman and two watchmen were made captive after which the robbers, using one of the watchmen as a guide went through the large building, in which 2,000 persons are employed, breaking into several small safes as well as the main vault.

More than two hours passed before the acetylene torches of the safe robbers ate through the inner doors of the vault.

Gene Edelstein, an official of the company was unable to give an accurate estimate of the amount obtained by the robbers. He said, however, that the gold and gold alloy used in the manufacture of watch cases which was kept in the vault may have amounted to $100,000 in value, although a partial check, under way this morning indicated this estimate to be much too high.

After the robbers had roared away toward Chicago in their automobiles, one of the watchmen succeeded in freeing himself and called the Elgin police.

Two hours later a speeding automobile containing three men was challenged by police of Melrose, a Chicago suburb, who fired a score of shots when the driver increased his speed and outdistanced pursuit.

The plant of the Illinois Watch Case company covers nearly two city blocks.

Boston, April 9.—George R. Ingersoll, stage manager of the Tremont theater for the past 26 years, is dead at his home here following a brief illness. In his early days, Ingersoll was on the road with famed Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske and E. E. Rice. He was widely known among theatrical folk.

Forged Money Orders Printed In State Pen

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—Discovery of 286 counterfeit postal money order blanks, printed in the Oklahoma state penitentiary at McAlester, Okla., was reported to Postmaster General New today as the result of a joint investigation by secret service men and postoffice inspectors.

The orders were all printed for the Nowata, Okla., postoffice, the investigators said, but none had been cashed. Indications were that they had lain in their hiding place a number of years. They were found in a two-inch space between the bottom shelf of a supply cabinet and a concrete floor.

MACON NEGRO HELD AS DRIVER OF CAR THAT KILLED WOMAN

Macon, Ga., April 9.—(AP)—Jesse McGee, a negro, employed in the sheriff's office, was arrested tonight charged with the murder of Mrs. Emmett O. Dobbs, wife of a prominent lawyer of Barnesville, Ga.

On Monday night, March 28, Mrs. Dobbs alighted from an Atlanta bus here, to take a train for Florida, when she was knocked down and killed by a hit-and-run automobile.

Since then the police and sheriff's deputies have been trying to locate the car that hit Mrs. Dobbs.

Three negroes who are said to have occupied seats in the car with McGee are being held as material witnesses, it was announced at the sheriff's office. One of these has confessed, but McGee denies that he was driving the car.

Work To Begin Soon On $8,000,000 Bridge Across Mississippi

Memphis, Tenn., April 9.—(AP)—Work will begin on the $8,000,000 bridge across the Mississippi river at Natchez as soon as approval of army engineers relative to height of the structure is obtained, Harry Bovay, of Stuttgart, Ark., announced here tonight after a conference of officials of railroads which will use the bridge. Mr. Bovay will meet with the army engineers at Natchez on April 20.

SIXTEEN KILLED BY RAGING FLOODS

Kansas City, Mo., April 9.—(United News.)—Turbulent rivers sweeping over their banks in Oklahoma and southeastern Kansas had caused heavy loss of life tonight and inundated valuable farm lands.

Sixteen persons are known to have been drowned and three others are reported missing.

Many families have been forced to flee from their homes. The waters are receding somewhat in Oklahoma, but the flood danger continues acute in southeastern Kansas, where the Virdigris river is rising rapidly.

LEVEES ARE SAFE, SAYS GOVERNMENT.

Memphis, Tenn., April 9.—(AP)—Vigilance and confidence prevailed tonight along the wide and turbulent course of the Mississippi river from Cairo, Ill., to New Orleans, and river engineers predicted that the government levees would continue to hold in check "all the water in sight."

Acute distress at Columbus, Ky., where a private dyke defends the town against the floods, was somewhat relieved during the day as the waters there, far above the level of the town and almost at the top of the embankment, began to fall slowly. Guardians of the levee top expressed the belief that when the decline in the current's height had reached one foot the danger would have been passed.

New Orleans' defenses were reported in readiness to hold against the great volume of waters moving down upon the lower part of the valley. Major W. H. Holcombe, engineer in charge of the fourth levee district, like the third district officials at Memphis, was confident that the flood would be held in bounds.

KEWANEE

Saving vs. Wasting

It's kind of silly to put up a fine, expensive building and install a cheap heating-boiler in it. That's a good deal like wearing a fine, tailor-made suit of clothes, a dirty hat and sloppy shoes.

Poor heat, insufficient heat, irregular heat means dissatisfied tenants, vacant rooms, aenemic profits. What you might save on a cheap boiler, you lose ten times over in these other ways. That isn't very smart, is it?

It's SAVING at the SPIGOT and WASTING at the BUNG!

Considering that the heating-boiler is the most important thing in the building, you ought to give it your first consideration, and not wait until after the plans are accepted and the contracts let. And to make everything sure, you should buy the Kewanee All-Steel (riveted) Firebox Boiler. From then on you are on Easy street.

The renting value of many an old building has been preserved by the Kewanee Boiler. Human beings would rather live in an old building where there is plenty of good heat than in a brand new building where the heat is as changeable as the moon and sometimes doesn't show up at all.

Think of your tenants first. They are the ones who pay the rent. But if they are not there, "they aint a goin' to be no rent."

The Old Man Behind the Boiler knows that Kewanee Boiler increases the renting and selling value of any building. Ask him how he knows.

Mirror's Bargain Basement Proves Popular at Opening

Innovation of a new and popular service for Atlanta women was marked Saturday morning when The Mirror, widely-known Whitehall style store, threw open the doors of its new bargain basement, a department which will cater to women and misses from this time forward.

Demonstrating in a striking way their approval of the basement department of this popular business establishment, a big crowd of prospective purchasers was on hand, and D. L. Simon, who is manager of the ready-to-wear fashion department on the second floor and who also will be in charge of the bargain basement, reported a splendid patronage for the entire opening day.

The basement department, which will carry a full and complete stock of dresses and coats, has been entirely done over and presented an attractive appearance when it received its first patrons. Lighted by a highly efficient overhead electrical system; cooled by a newly-installed refrigerating process and equipped with the most modern and tasteful of new fixtures and equipment, the department showed to great advantage with its colorful and fresh stock of spring merchandise offerings.

"The basement will be conducted in exactly the same way as are other departments of The Mirror," Mr. Simon said. "That is, we shall strive at all times to offer only the highest qualities and values at prices that we believe will be the lowest obtainable in Atlanta.

"We will feature new merchandise exclusively in the basement, merchandise bought specially for this department. At no time will it be made a dumping ground for our other departments, but we guarantee every purchase to be fresh and of full value. As is usual at The Mirror, we stand ready to refund the money on any purchase that is not entirely satisfactory."

A force of 35 salespersons greeted first arrivals at the new basement department, which henceforth will have a permanent display of its merchandise in the new front windows of The Mirror, which have just been installed.

The basement has ten spacious fitting rooms and is equipped with every convenience for its customers. The usual charge and delivery courtesy will be extended patrons, and elevator service to the basement is available at all times. Mr. Simon issues a cordial invitation to the general public to call and inspect the new serivce.

Rich's Hosiery Department One Reason Why Women Here Are Famous for Being Properly and Beautifully 'Hosed'

This is Rich's galaxy of super-graduates in hosiery selling, each being an expert in the line. Reading left to right, they are Miss Myrtice Waddell, Mrs. Aline White, Miss Ruby Martin, Miss Annie Eassy, Mrs. Lily Weldon, Mrs. Bessie Farmer, Mrs. Hazel Byck, Mrs. Annie Britt, Mrs. Mattie Humphries, Mrs. Annie Pratt, Mrs. Gladys Reeves, Miss Gender Bassett, Mrs. Maggie Powell and Mrs. Rose Berger.

Rich's hosiery department, under the skilled leadership and guiding hand of Sol Rubin, has grown in the past eight years from a small, unimportant feature of this great store to one of the foremost hosiery departments in America. It has become national and almost international in its scope. During the semi-annual hosiery classics, occuring each February and October, orders have been received from 22 states in the union, and even from foreign countries.

The department is in direct charge of Miss Cora Niehause and fourteen hosiery experts, some of whom have had as much as twenty years' experience in selling hosiery. These young women are very often called upon by well-meaning but helpless husbands to select hosiery for lucky wives. They know how to pick 'em and do so willingly and gladly.

This famous department cherishes the reputation of doing the best business in proportion to population of any hosiery department in America. It is one reason why women of Atlanta are always faultlessly "hosed," for it offers the cream of the nation's finest hosiery. Rich's has always featured the foremost nationally-advertised brands so that it might offer to the public the very best obtainable, eliminating any possible doubt. The five best known makes handled in this department are Kayser, McCallum, Phoenix Holeproof and Propper.

Two added features are found in Atlanta exclusively at Rich's. First is the hosiery repair service, by which hose bought there may be so skillfully mended and knitted back that they are as perfect as if the treacherous run had never wrought its damage. In this way many hose, perfect except for a run, may be made as good as new. This service is rendered at a very nominal cost.

The other feature is the Showtex, by which hose are examined in the presence of the customer, thus assuring her of receiving faultless stockings.

POWER COMPANY OPENS SUBSTATION

Doors of the new Spring street electric substation of the Georgia Power company will be opened to the public for the first time Friday night when more than 1,000 Atlantans, prominent in civic and engineering life, will be the guests of the company on an "open house" tour of three of the company's Atlanta plants.

The tour will start at 7:30 o'clock at the Fulton county plant of the company at 33 Virginia avenue, where street cars are built, overhauled, repaired and painted. The plant is one of the most modern and safe plants in the United States and largely through the work done there Atlanta's street railway system in 1926 was able to establish the record of each car traveling more than the distance around the world without a breakdown.

Double-deck coaches will be at the plant at the disposal of visitors to carry them on the remainder of the tour.

The Boulevard substation will be the next plant visited. At this station the electric power, generated in north Georgia, comes speeding into Atlanta over the high tension transmission lines and is "tamed" sufficiently to be put on the city distribution system to supply Atlanta's electric power.

Guests will then be escorted to the Spring street substation, which is on Spring street near Fourteenth street. The station is automatic and noiseless and the first one of its kind in Atlanta. It is operated without a single person being in attendance.

Doors of the building are locked night and day, marvelously delicate mechanical devices doing the work which operators usually do.

Because of the unusual interest which the public has shown in the new substation, it will be open to inspection by visitors from 7:30 o'clock until 9:30 o'clock. Guides will be present at each of the points visited to explain the many intricate details of operation.

LUCKIE IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION TO MEET

Final plans preparatory to beginning of actual work on the regrading widening and repaving of Luckie street are slated to be made at a meeting of property owners along the affected route at 8 o'clock Monday night at Payne Memorial Methodist church, it was announced Saturday.

Only a few property holders have failed thus far to sign deeds to additional property needed by the city and county to make Luckie a 50-foot boulevard, and these are expected to be ready to sign Monday night, it is said.

Preliminary plans have been completed and actual work can be begun just as soon as remaining signatures are added to the list already compiled.

This step is required for the improvement, and those living along the route of the proposed improvement are calling the meeting to prevent possible delay in beginning work

Fulton county has joined the city in sharing expense of the project, and officials are anxious to start as soon as possible.

PLANS FOR LEGION PIEDMONT CLUB LAID AT MEETING

Plans for erection of an American Legion clubhouse at Piedmont park were mapped out Friday night by members of Argonne Post No. 1, at its regular monthly meeting at the Chamber of Commerce building, it was announced by J. F. Morrison, adjutant.

The site on which the projected Legion home is to be built was presented the organization last year by the city of Atlanta. The lot is located on the south side of the Twelfth street entrance to Piedmont park and is admirably suited to the purpose, officials declared.

Discussion formulated a plan of campaign for funds which will appeal to members of the American Legion who are financially able to give, and to the public, so that they may have opportunity of a material expression of appreciation to the veterans, it was explained.

Entertainment features at the meeting were provided by the seven-piece dance orchestra which was cordially received by the assembled veterans.

Work of paving a section of the road in Monroe county between Forsyth and Macon was completed Saturday and forces of the highway department removed detour signs and debris so that motorists can use the road Sunday.

From Perry to Marietta is the longest stretch of paved highway in the state, the distance being 145 miles. The two-mile section near Hampton will be finished in less than two months, and when the paving is completed a huge motorcade will be run from Perry to Atlanta May 25 in celebration of the event.

FALLING TREE KILLS KENTUCKY SHERIFF

Frankfort, Ky., April 9.—(AP)—Sheriff Ambrose McDonald, 35 years old, of Franklin county, was killed by a falling tree while he was trying to save a hog today. He was cutting down the tree at his home on the Georgetown pike and a hog came up. He tried to drive the hog from danger and the tree struck him, breaking his neck.

Sheriff McDonald is survived by his widow and three children.

Hotels Worried Over Scarcity of Help

Thousands of Men and Women Needed.

Because of the increased number of hotels being erected, costing a billion dollars, this year the hotels are finding it almost impossible to obtain trained employees, despite the fact that salaries from $2,500 to $10,000 annually are earned by men and women holding such positions. "This big building program means a greater scarcity of employees to fill positions in restaurants, clubs, cafeteries, tea rooms, apartment hotels, institutes, colleges, etc., as well as to manage hotels in every town and city in the country," says Mr. Clifford Lewis, President of the Lewis Hotel Training School, Bureau 62, Washington, Circle, Washington, D. C. He estimates that in excess of 150,000 positions are open. This institution has been called upon to obtain competent help. Ambitious men and women who want to get into this profitable work should communicate with Mr. Lewis, who will gladly send, free, full particulars on how to qualify for a high paying position. Write him today.—(adv.)

BOARD TO GET SCHOOL AUDIT

Preliminary steps to adjust the budget difference existing at present between the board of education and citizens' advisory committee, will be made Tuesday when the board meets for its April session. At this time an audit of 1926 accounts of the school departments will be placed before the board for examination.

When this is submitted to the citizens' advisory committee headed by Harold Hirsch, that body and a special committee from the board will be ready to attempt to adjust differences between the board and the citizens' committee which has supervision of school expenditures this year.

Dr. Eubanks declared Saturday that he would not release copies of the audit until the document has been officially submitted to the board. This will take place Tuesday afternoon.

In addition to Mr. Hirsch, W. T. Perkerson, W. W. Orr, H. Warner Martin and H. Y. McCord are members of the citizens' advisory body. Dr. Eubanks, W. C. Slate, M. D. Therrell, W. D. Hoffman and Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools, are members from the board and the school department, who will attempt to settle differences between the committee and the board relative to adoption of a budget for this year.

Two budgets of the board have been summarily turned down by the committee, and the board is now operating under a revised budget which was rejected, but which the committee agreed to permit temporarily until a definite budget is settled upon.

It is the definite budget on which the board and the committee disagree, and efforts of the special committee from the board and the administrative department will be directed towards ironing out these differences concerning administration of school funds.

The rules committee of the board headed by Mrs. Julia O'Keefe Nelson, of the sixth ward, will hold a meeting Monday afternoon, and the buildings and grounds committee, of which W. C. Slate, of the second, is chairman, will hold a session Tuesday afternoon before the board meets to discuss reconstruction of Ashby Street school, recently destroyed by fire.

Other routine matters will be considered Tuesday by the board.

Blood Transfer Proves Success; Kendley Better

"The blood transfusion to T. A. Kendley was a success and both the patient and the donor, L. B. Burger, are in splendid condition."

This welcome statement was issued by officials of the Piedmont sanitarium Saturday following the infusion of new blood to Kendley, former employee of the Georgia Power company, who was stricken with an acute liver ailment four years ago and whose fight for recovery has attracted the attention of the city.

Attendants at the sanitarium were elated at the success of the operation. They said that Kendley, who has gained a reputation in the hospital as one of the bravest patients ever received there, smiled and talked optimistically during the delicate procedure, and declared that he felt "much better and stronger" at its conclusion. Physicians stated that the transfusion will give Kendley a base upon which to work out his recovery and that his color has already been greatly heightened.

Stricken while attending church services more than four years ago, Kendley learned that his liver was affected. Fourteen times he was carried to various hospitals where operations were performed but each time he showed little improvement. Some 10 days ago, he was taken to the Piedmont sanitarium. It was found that a transfusion of blood was imperative to his recovery. The Constitution, learning of the man's plight, published an appeal for volunteers for the transfusion and the entire city responded. So exacting were the requirements of the blood tests that it was only after 150 volunteers had been examined that one proved satisfactory. This was L. B. Burger, of 1095 Peeples street, S. W., who, through a singular sidelight, is employed in the same department at the power company as was Kendley before he was stricken.

Although the successful transfusion by no means assures complete recovery of Kendley, it betters his chances many times, physicians say.

Sterchi's, Newly Renovated, Opens Spring Trade Monday

Remodeled and decorated in a highly attractive way in keeping with the opening of its spring business, the Sterchi Furniture company on Mitchell street, just off Whitehall, Monday morning will open its doors to customers with a fresh and colorful line of new spring home furnishings that will appeal to every taste and pocketbook.

For the past 10 days workmen have been busy 24 hours out of each day remodeling the first floor of the building, and patrons who call at the widely known furniture house Monday will see radical and attractive changes in the structure.

As a result of the remodeling work, the first floor of the Sterchi building no longer will have two levels, with steps downward, but will be entirely level and its 8,000 square feet of hardwood space will be covered with handsome new displays of furniture of the most seasonable and wanted types. In addition, the first floor will boast of a mezzanine sweeping in a broad horse shoe around the side of the building, on which will be located executive offices of the store and displays of novelty and odd-piece furnishings. On this floor also will be wholesale department and delivery department offices.

At the rear of the ground floor will be the general retail offices, the credit department, the phone exchange and salesmen's desks. Extending to the front of the store in tasteful groups will be Sterchi's new and attractive styles of spring furnishings for every room and need of the household. The displays have been arriving during the past several days and Saturday presented a colorful and impressive sight, the bright colors of spring lawn and porch goods contrasting with the subdued tones of the magnificent bedroom, dining-room and living-room suites about them.

In addition to the first floor and mezzanine, which latter is lighted by new French windows, the building has been renovated generally and cleaned and furnished in readiness for the spring trade. From top to bottom it has received heavy consignments of fresh stock, and is prepared to meet the anticipated heavy demand of the season.

W. M. Hicks, secretary and manager of the Atlanta division of the Sterchi company, was in charge of the work done at the store, which he said was in keeping with the widely known furniture house's policy of keeping ahead of the times in meeting the needs of its patrons.

"We now have 30 stores and eight big warehouses and are planning to open new retail establishments soon," he said. "We own our own fine hardwood timber, our own mills and our own buildings. With all these facilities we could not fail to serve our patrons and serve them well. This work here is part of our campaign to take care of those who patronize us."

CLEVELAND CITED IN CHARTER DEBATE

Claiming that the per capita government cost of Cleveland, Ohio, is only $37.47 instead of the $53.04 total as claimed by opponents of the proposed city manager charter for Atlanta, Miss Eleanor Raoul Saturday released a statement from Mayor Fesler, director of the Citizens league of Cleveland, in support of her contention. Miss Raoul is one of the supporters of the proposed new charter for Atlanta. Cleveland has a city manager form of government, which has been attacked by those opposing the change.

The statement follows:

"Mayor Fesler, director of Citizens' league of Cleveland, Ohio, has wired the citizens' charter committee that the 'present indebtedness of approximately $113,000,000 has not increased under city manager charter; lowest tax rate of any one of the first 10 cities; per capita expenditure, $37.47, about the same as under old regime but service rendered is immensely better; the most efficient government since Tom Johnson's administration.

"'Petition with 27,000 signatures has been filed to repeal the city manager charter, chiefly a struggle for control of republican party, charter amendment incidental.'

"Mr. Hartsfield in a recent speech, according to newspaper reports, claimed that the expense was $53.04 per capita, when, according to the figures from Cleveland which came by wire to the citizens' charter committee it was only $37.47 and ranks among the first 10 cities for a low tax rate.

"Instead of 40,000 signatures claimed by Mr. Hartsfield as signing a petition, it seems, according to the telegram, that Mr. Hartsfield has made an error of many thousands and left out other important items in connection with the petition. A letter from Mr. Fesler stated, 'Only one candidate for the council during the campaign attacked the manager for his administration of affairs and none even suggested the abandonment of the city manager form of government.'"

League Refutation.

A letter received by The Constitution Saturday from the National Municipal League, with headquarters at 261 Broadway, New York city, makes the following refutation:

"William P. Hartsfield, Atlanta alderman, made the statement in your paper March 24 that the National Municipal League was interested in promoting city manager government in Atlanta for the sole purpose of creating a highly paid municipal administrative position.

"I wish to state that the National Municipal League is interested in securing adoption of the city manager plan by our cities for the purpose of promoting the soundest form of municipal administration possible in American cities. The league has no interest whatsoever in placing men in these positions, in fact, the league neither gives suggestions nor advice regarding possible applicants for the jobs.

"The National Municipal League has no connection with the City Managers' association, which is a professional organization for city managers. Our organization was promoted to improve the machinery of civic government, and for that purpose alone we work. We are supported by private contributions and by a membership of 3,000 scattered throughout the country, and our governing council is composed of many leading Democrats, independents and republicans of the United States."

The letter bears the signature of G. R. Howe, assistant secretary.

Suspicious License On Auto Results In Catch of Liquor

His suspicion aroused Saturday by a truck license number on a touring car, Deputy Sheriff R. T. Tolbert, of Fulton county, investigated and found a one-gallon can of corn whisky in the machine which was parked at a filling station on Marietta street.

As the deputy reached the car in which two negroes were seated, one of them reached for the door of the machine, apparently to dash for liberty. Deputy Tolbert grasped the negro's coat and was pulled through the car, receiving several bruises and lacerations.

The officer held onto the coat until the garment ripped and was torn from the negro, who continued his dash. The other negro in the car also escaped with his companion. The whisky and car were taken to Fulton tower and confiscated.

'Homes Beautiful' Exhibition Ends Big Week Today

Two of Exhibit Homes Sold, It Is Announced; Thousands Throng Houses Saturday.

MANY OUT-OF-TOWN VISITORS REGISTER

Furnishings of Six Lovely Residences Show Artistic Results of Discriminating Purchasing.

Thousands are expected to visit The Constitution's "Home Beautiful" exhibit on this the final day of the 1927 show.

After one of the most successful and heavily-patronized exhibits in the history of the annual affair sponsored by The Constitution, this year's show will terminate tonight.

The exhibits are open all day in Avondale Estates, Haynes Manor, Garden Hills and Argonne Drive, six exquisitely-furnished residences comprising the group.

Two Homes Sold.

As a criterion of the excellence of the exhibits shown, it was announced Saturday that two of the six residences included in the group were purchased outright. The residence at 82 Clarendon avenue was sold to C. H. Danforth, southeastern manager of the Frigidaire corporation, for $15,500.

The other, located at 10 Covington road, was sold to a recent arrival in Atlanta—M. H. Coleman, southeastern representative of Lehn & Fink, pharmaceutical supply house. The sum involved was $15,500. Both residences were constructed for The Constitution.

Women—and men—who contemplate construction of homes or refurnishing of homes already occupied have been urged to visit the Home Beautiful exhibits before the close tonight. Many valuable suggestions are contained within the six houses, and the furniture and equipment shown comprise the last word in those particular fields.

One of the most advantageous features of the show from the visitors' standpoint is the information gained on the subject of discriminating purchasing. Never before has the fact been so emphatically demonstrated that homes may be furnished impressively without entailing great expenditures.

Visitors during the week—and espe-

SINGLE SEAT SALE FOR NINE OPERAS WILL OPEN MONDAY

Unprecedented Demand Seen on Eve of Opening of Sale at Cable Piano Company.

The long-awaited sale of single seats for the nine performances of the Metropolitan Grand Opera company in Atlanta April 25-30, opens Monday morning at 9 o'clock at the box office in the Cable Piano company, and preparations have been made to handle a record demand for advance seats. The box office will remain open from 9 to 5 o'clock daily until the end of opera week.

With two new operas, two double bills and the other performances devoted to old-time favorites in Atlanta, the demand for tickets during the next two weeks is expected to surpass any advance single seat sale in the past. The sale of season tickets was exceptionally good, but the single seat sale is expected to be even better.

For Atlanta's 17th annual renewal of Metropolitan Opera week, nine operas, and the greatest array of singers ever assembled for an Atlanta season have been provided by the New York company. The most splendid operas in the repertoire of the company, as well as its most outstanding singers will be brought to Atlanta.

New Operas Favored.

The two new operas to Atlanta will be "Turandot," on Wednesday evening, and "Mignon," on Thursday evening. Both of these were revived in New York by the Metropolitan this past season, and both created sensations. New costumes and new scenery were provided for them, and will be brought to Atlanta.

Verdis' beloved masterpiece "La Traviata," will open the annual season on Monday night, and will be followed by the only double bill of the week on Tuesday evening, when Puccini's "Gianni Schicchi," and Montezuma's "L'amore Dei Tre Re" will be given.

The first matinees of the week will be on Friday afternoon, when Richard Wagner's well-known "Lohengrin" will be sung, followed on Fri-

BUSINESS CENSUS TO BE MADE HERE

Atlanta, Selected as One of "Key" Cities for Information, Expected To Help City.

F. A. Gosnell, special agent of the United States bureau of census, is expected to arrive here Monday to start compiling a distributor's census in this city, it was announced Saturday by Fred T. Newell, secretary of the industrial bureau of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce.

Atlanta was selected as one of the few cities chosen for this compilation of statistics, following presentation of Atlanta claims at the conference of industrial managers at Washington, D. C., on March 28. Other key cities selected after much controversy were Baltimore, Syracuse, Detroit, Jackson (Miss.), Houston, Springfield (Ill.), Springfield (Mass.), Denver, Seattle, San Francisco, Kansas City and Boise City, Idaho.

Word that Atlanta had been chosen was contained in a wire received from the government director of census. It is said that the census which is being made by the United States bureau of the census in a few "key" cities of the country will cover all business establishments distributing merchandise at retail or wholesale and all firms performing personal services.

Will Aid Atlanta.

Announcement that Atlanta will be included in the census adds to the significance of the movement to make the city a leading distribution center of the country since the bureau of the census is selecting for the preliminary census only cities which are considered especially representative, it is said.

The new distribution census will take in all classes of distributors, wholesalers, retailers, commission merchants and manufacturers' agents. Banks, hotels, etc., also will be enumerated, as well as such personal service firms as barber shops and billiard rooms.

Government enumerators will collect complete information concerning firms in all lines of business. Totals will show how many stores there are in 48 lines and how much is spent in each of the classes. Further divisions of the information, it is stated, will show the amount of yearly sales in 80 classes of commodities and through what kinds of stores they are made.

As a result of the census Atlanta merchants will know approximately how much the city spends for automobiles, books, house furnishings, radio, groceries, cigars and tobacco, candy, clothing and other commodities. In addition, the totals will furnish information concerning the number of merchandise outlets for the many commodity classes.

W. M. Stewart, director of the census, in making a statement concerning the purposes and methods of the census says: "The results of this distribution census will be made avail-

Winter's Last Flare Hurries Through City

Clearing Skies and Balmy Winds Follow in Wake of Rains.

The rag-tag and bobtail of winter scurried through Atlanta Saturday, leaving chill breezes, drenching showers with alternate shafts of sunshine in their wake and retiring Winter probably will make a few faces at advancing Spring today, with some leaden skies and threats of a drizzle, according to the forecast of C. F. von Herrmann, in charge of the local weather bureau. Temperatures Saturday ranged from 45 to 69.

Winter's final flare was general throughout the south, according to news dispatches and in such northern centers as Medicine Hat, Boston, Delaware Breakwater and Cape Hatteras, Winter showed reluctance to retire by producing freezing weather, tinctured here and there by storms, gales and even blizzards.

Chester, S. C., came to the front with a report of a "flurry of snow," while chill winds and sleet checked the advancing hordes of straw-hat wearers in other parts of the south.

Atlantans experimented with all kinds of weather Saturday. They marched to and from business with straw hats in one hand and raincoats, umbrellas and over shoes in the other. Before the day was over they had opportunities to use all the paraphernalia.

Leaden skies will spread over the city today, but hardly will produce any rain, in the opinion of Mr. von Herrmann. He attributed the cranky weather to the transition period between winter and summer. This week considerable cloudiness and occasional rains in the beginning are predicted for the southern plains and west gulf states. General fair weather will prevail during the middle of the week, while the latter part of the week will experience showers with temperature near or somewhat above normal, according to the prediction.

The unexpected return of winter weather was quite general throughout the country, according to dispatches. San Francisco, on the coast; Salt Lake City, in the inter-mountain section; Idaho Falls, Pocatello and Boise, in Idaho; Medicine Hat, and other northern points, reported heavy snow falls.

CANADA SHIVERS IN IN BLIZZARD WAVE.

Medicine Hat, Alberta, April 9.—(AP)—The worst blizzard of the season raged today in this district. High winds piled snowdrifts from four to five feet deep.

SNOW REPORTED IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

Chester, S. C., April 9.—(AP)—A flurry of snow occurred here this morning.

STORM WARNINGS ARE BROADCAST.

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—The weather bureau late today issued the following storm warnings:

"Advisory northeast storm warnings ordered 4 p. m., Delaware breakwater to Boston, Mass., disturbance near Hatteras, increasing in intensity will probably move northeastward and cause strong northeast winds tonight reaching gale force off the coast."

COOLIDGE THREAT CHARGED TO DRYS

Stayton Tells How Anti-Saloon League Meeting Failed To Agree on Press Attack.

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—William H. Stayton, chairman of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, declared today that the statement of Arthur J. Barton, chairman of the Anti-Saloon League executive committee, that a number of southern states would vote the republican ticket if the democrats nominated Governor Smith of New York for the presidency, "illustrates perfectly the double standard of camouflage" of the league.

He said that in December, 1925, Barton had written Roy A. Haynes, now acting prohibition commissioner, that "if Al Smith should succeed in getting the democratic nomination, in the present confused situation, he will defeat Coolidge or any other man that the republicans may name." He also quoted Barton as urging Haynes to read an article in the New York Times of that month as "it makes very clear the growing strength of Al Smith in the south."

The letter from Barton to Haynes grew out of correspondence between Anti-Saloon League officials as a result of the attack by former Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania, on the administration's enforcement methods, Stayton said. This attack was made at the league's crisis convention in Chicago in 1925, he continued, and at that time the executive committee of the league prepared a press release attacking President Coolidge for misfeasance or malfeasance in office on account of the administration failing to enforce the prohibition law to the satisfaction of the league.

"By a vote of five to four this press release was not issued," Stayton added, "but a rather curt letter was sent to President Coolidge in which they told him it would not tolerate evasion or inefficiency in the matter of prohibition."

He said the action of the league's committee was taken in a Chicago hotel Sunday, November 8, 1925, and quoted what he said was the text of the suppressed document. It read in part:

"The constitution of the United States specifically places the duty of enforcing the laws upon the president of the United States. He is the only officer so charged in the federal constitution with responsibility for enforcement, and it is impossible for him to shift this responsibility to any cabinet member or departmental official.

"The Anti-Saloon League cannot do less than the constitution does in the recognition of law enforcement responsibility and it therefore calls upon Calvin Coolidge, the president of the United States, publicly to declare that past and present conditions which amount to a hindrance to the enforcement of enforcement do not represent the policy of his administration. And the Anti-Saloon League further calls upon the president to indicate his acceptance of enforcement of the law for the triumph of the government over the bootlegger and his affiliated outlaws."

4 GEORGIANS DIE AND 5 ARE INJURED IN CAR ACCIDENTS

Two Girls Killed at Calhoun Grade Crossing as Dixie Flyer Crashes Into Machine.

Automobile accidents in Georgia claimed a fearful toll within a few days' time, four persons being killed and five injured, according to news reports.

Two girls, Miss Idell Smith, 14, and Miss Doris Phillips, 16, were killed at Calhoun in sight of their homes as the southbound Dixie Flyer struck the car in which they were riding. A 10-year-old child saved her life in the Calhoun crash by jumping from the car.

Herschel Rittenhouse was fatally injured and two companions were hurt in an automobile collision near Rome and H. R. Surrett, of Tifton, was killed instantly and two other passengers in the car were seriously injured as his car went into a culvert. Miss Ruth Adams, of Miami, was hurt near Kingston when the car in which she was traveling was crowded off the highway and went into a ditch.

2 CALHOUN GIRLS KILLED BY TRAIN.

Calhoun, Ga., April 9.—(AP)—Miss Idell Smith, 14 years old, and Miss Doris Phillips, 16, were killed within a few hundred yards of their homes late Friday when their small automobile was struck by the southbound mail section of the Dixie Flier at a crossing here.

Mary Phillips, about 10 years old, who was siting between her sister and Miss Smith, jumped to safety just before the crash and escaped injury. She was the only eye-witness to the tragedy.

The little girl told Coroner C. S. Jackson that their car had gotten over the tracks safely when Doris, who was driving, became excited and lost control, the automobile rolling back onto the tracks. The train comes out of a deep cut at that point.

Both of the victims were high school students and Miss Phillips was to have been on the program at a school en-

Couple Rewed After Parting Of 37 Years

Woman Outlives Second Husband and Man Two Other Wives.

Des Moines, Iowa, April 9.—(AP)—Eighteen years after her marriage to Alexander Hughes, 55 years ago at Victor, Iowa, Mrs. Hughes gathered together her ten children and went home to mother, leaving Alexander in charge of the family home at Elm Creek, Neb. That was 37 years ago.

Today the couple was again married by Judge Lester L. Thompson.

The separation occured in 1890. Alexander, then 40, refused to cajole and coax. He also left Elm Creek, he wandered here and there, was married twice in the interim, outlived both of his wives, and grew wealthy on oil land near Tulsa, Okla.

Mrs. Hughes, free to marry when she was granted a divorce from Alexander, has outlived her second husband by five years.

Neither knew the whereabouts of the first mate until a Tulsa attorney wrote to George Hughes, a son here, a month ago, saying: "A man named Alexander Hughes seeks information regarding his wife, Marian, who left him in 1890."

The son boarded the next train for Tulsa.

Three days later Alexander and Marian wrapped their arms about each other for the first time in more than a third of a century.

Eight children were overjoyed. Twenty-five grand children gathered around the man they thought dead.

RINGING OF BELL BRINGS MEMORY BACK TO OHIOAN

Baton Rouge, La., April 9.—(AP)—The ringing of a bell in a boarding house here, the tone of which was similar to that used in his home at Lima, Ohio, restored the memory of M. H. Pepple and today he was on his way back home.

Pepple said he remembered nothing that had transpired since he and some friends engaged in a card game at his home. He did not know how he reached Baton Rouge, he said, and upon regaining his memory thought at first he was in his home.

During his travels he had changed his clothing to suit the southern climate and had on his person a ticket issued by a New Orleans jeweler.

DAWES CHARGED WITH EXCEEDING HIS AUTHORITY

Reed and Others Stirred by Vice President's Action in Appointment of Fess.

FUNDS ARE DENIED BY SENATOR KEYES

Reed, of Pennsylvania, Again Asserts Committee, Headed by Reed, of Missouri, Is Dead.

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—Vice President Dawes transgressed the rules of the senate in filling the vacancy on the senate campaign investigating committee, in the opinion of Senator Reed, republican, Pennsylvania, who led the successful filibuster in the closing days of the last session against the resolution specifically continuing the committee.

Returning here today from a vacation in Bermuda, the Pennsylvanian held hurried conferences with other republican leaders, and then issued a formal statement assailing the vice president and reiterating his own conclusion that the committee headed by his distant cousin, "Jim" Reed, of Missouri, is dead.

Defied by Keyes.

A similar view was taken by Chairman Keyes, of the audit and control committee, who holds the senate purse strings. Senator Keyes declared he had not changed his position as to withholding official funds from the committee and added:

"I have gone all over the resolutions since Mr. Dawes announced his position, but I can see no reason to change my view that the committee is dead."

Reed, of Pennsylvania, who had a large hand in the nomination of General Dawes at the republican convention at Cleveland in 1924, was somewhat blunt in his statement concerning the lack of power of the vice president to name a successor to Senator

Love Story Lies Behind MacDonald's Pilgrimage

BRITISH EX-PREMIER RE-TRAVELS HONEYMOON TRAIL

Southampton, England, April 9.—(AP)—Ramsay MacDonald, Great Britain's only labor prime minister, sailed for the United States on the Aquitania at noon today. With his daughter, Ishbel, he is to visit New York, Washington and other eastern cities, leaving for home about April 27.

He said he would try to forget British politics during the trip, which is in the nature of a vacation.

FOLLOWS TRAIL OF HONEYMOON.

BY FRANK H. KING.

London, April 9.—(AP)—Behind the prosaic news that Ramsay MacDonald, one time British premier, is sailing for the United States today aboard the steamship Aquitania, lies a love story which turns the voyage into a pilgrimage to the land he visited 30 years ago during the days of his greatest happiness.

Since then honors of state have been heaped upon him. From the obloquy of the world war period when he was reviled as a traitor to his country and was probably the worst hated man in all Britain, Mr. MacDonald reentered public life, became prime minister, a confidant of King George V, and one of the most powerful men of post-war Europe.

But through it all, he has been a lonely figure, for one person above all others with whom this dour but romantic Scotsman would have cared to share his honors passed from his presence 15 years ago, but not from his life. Two rings that he wears on his left hand are the symbol of the lasting dedication of his devotion to a woman's memory.

It was a wedding trip that first took the MacDonalds to the United States and it was a hostess in that country who gave such perfect courtesy to Mr. MacDonald and his bride that he has never forgotten it. It is to accept an invitation from this hostess of many years ago that Ramsay MacDonald is crossing the Atlantic again, this time a widower and with his daughter Ishbel, to renew old memories.

Mr. MacDonald's love story is as romantic as his rise to political power from the poverty and obscurity of a bleak Scottish fishing village, Lossiemouth, to a place of power in his country. As a raw youth, he came to London, toiled and studied unceasingly and then entered politics.

It was during his first parliamentary battles in Southampton in 1885 that he received a contribution to his campaign fund from a stranger who signed an accompanying letter, "M. E. Gladstone." Soon the young candidate learned that 'M. E." stood for Margaret Ethel, the daughter of a distinguished chemist and a niece of the famous Lord Kelvin. A swift courtship followed and the couple were married in November, 1896.

Mrs. MacDonald plunged into the labor movement and became a noted hostess and social worker. She traveled up and down the country with her husband, always in the closest companionship with his hopes and ideals. They visited the United States, Canada and other countries and it was in the United States that they met the lady who again is to be Mr. MacDonald's hostess. He has refused to reveal her name fearing that the attendant publicity would embarrass her.

After 15 years of companionship, Mrs. MacDonald died, a victim of blood poisoning. The future prime minister, with five children gathered around him, penned a memoir which is a heart searching tribute to the woman he loved.

"To turn to her in stress and storm was like going into a sheltered haven and smiling up at the face of heaven," he wrote, "Weary and worn, buffeted and discouraged, I would flee to her and my lady would heal and soothe me with her cheery faith and steady conviction and send me forth to smite and be smitten."

One of the finest groups of statuary in London is a memorial to Mrs. MacDonald, as a woman and a social worker. It stands in Lincoln Inn fields in the heart of London. Its feature is a row of laughing children at play.

Confessed Kidnaper Tells Frank Story of Exploit

VIRGINIA JO FRAZIER'S ABDUCTOR TALKS FROM CELL

BY WHITNER CARY.
Constitution Staff Correspondent.

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 9.—In the game of crime, one of the most popular of the present day pastimes, perfect play is required on the part of the criminal.

His adversaries, law and order, can blunder, can misplay almost at will; yet so great is their advantage that their many miscues will be erased when the final count is made. But the criminal, be he the master mind of some outlaw band or the vilest and most obscure sneak thief, can slip but once.

Because of such a lone misplay Lewis Willis and his youthful brother, Arthur, negroes, today are viewing the cold bars of a Chattanooga jail with the even colder prospect of gazing on other bars for a considerable length of time, while one of the most sensational and daring kidnaping cases ever attempted in the south is solved, instead of being relegated to the realms of mystery.

All are too well acquainted with the history of this famous and extraordinary case in the Tennessee city to have details repeated. But the character of the one who played the leading criminal role, his motives, his plans and his feelings while committing this twentieth century Charlie Ross, his subsequent reactions and, lastly, that fatal slip, may be of interest.

Lewis recently confessed to the kidnaping of 2-year-old Virginia Jo Frazier, daughter of City Commissioner Fred B. Frazier, and is being held for trial in the Chattanooga jail.

In introducing the iprncipal actor the correspondent will take you to the county jail in Chattanooga. The hour was late, almost midnight, and, although it was a bit unusual to see prisoners at that hour, the courtesy of Sheriff Tom Selman permitted Lewis and Arthur to be seen. A word from the sheriff and Lewis, who was in the first cell, arose from his cot, shook slumber from his eyelids and, in the most apologetic manner, as if he regretted even this slight delay, came toward the grating. Lewis has personality. This may seem strange, but it is true nevertheless. Lewis also has brains. One was convinced of that after the first dozen words had fallen from his low-pitched, pleasant voice. And above all else Lewis is an actor of no mean ability.

If the surroundings were different and you met Lewis in some employment agency or at the back door of your home you would feel an instinctive desire to hire and trust him. For if there was ever a personality of politeness, respect and withal a certain whimsical humor it was in the occupant of that cell of the Chattanooga jail.

Lewis was as free with his conversation as he is accused of being with other people's children. Never was there the slightest hesitancy on his part in answering the many questions fired through the opening between those two-inch bars Friday night.

Why did he take the child? "Well, sir, it was this way. I had thought a lot about kidnaping from reading and from the movies. (Lewis had gone as far as the seventh grade in school and as far east as New York in his wandering), and I just thought I would try my hand. How did I happen to pick on Mr. Frazier? Well, I wanted to find a man with money and in looking over the city I saw his name on a lot of signboards as having houses and lots for sale and I just naturally concluded that he must have money." Lewis further added that he planned the job about two weeks before he attempted it.

Lewis told how he slipped into the Frazier home the night of the stealing,

CREDIT LEAGUERS HOLD CONVENTION

Rapid development of the employees' mutual banking movement is seen in announcement that the newly-formed Credit Union League of Georgia will hold its first annual convention in the chamber of commerce building here, at 12:15 o'clock Thursday, April 14.

The convention will be conducted under auspices of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, which has sponsored the credit union movement as a means of combating the evils of "loan sharks." George M. Gentry, president of the league, at the time of the announcement extended an invitation to employees of all organizations capable of instituting credit unions to be present at the meeting.

Addresses by George W. West, president of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, and S. Guyt McLendon, secretary of state, will feature the opening hour of the session, during which Herbert B. Kennedy, president of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, will preside. Followin the luncheon session the initial convention of the Credit Union League of Georgia will be formally opened with President Gentry presiding. Other speakers, who have been selected to talk on topics pertaining to credit union development, are A. B. Mobley, state superintendent of banks; Horace Russell, secretary of the Georgia Building and Loan association; E. M. Steimle, secretary of the Georgia Industrial Loan association; Milton W. Bell, cashier of the Federal Reserve bank; Jerome Jones, editor of the Journal of Labor; B. S. Barker, executive vice president of the chamber of commerce; and J. L. R. Boyd, of the legal aid section United States Junior Chamber of Commrece.

Ten Unions Formed.

Since the passing of the Georgia credit union law, in August, 1925, with the view to providing a safe field of investment for surplus earnings of employees and at the same time providing them with the means of contracting small loans, the number of credit unions formed by employees of commercial organizations has been steadily increasing. Ten such associations, which are members of the Georgia league, have a membership of more than 2,500.

Mr. Gentry, president of the league and vice president and secretary of the A., B. & C. Railway Employees Credit Union, issued the following statement in reference to the work of his association:

"The credit union law of Georgia has made it possible for that portion of the citizens of Georgia known as the working class to learn the lesson of thrift.

"Small loans are not profitable to banks, and the facilities provided to meet the situation, before the passage of the credit union law, have made an unsavory reputation for the state that can best be overcome by adoption of the credit union system.

"The credit union law is not intended in any way to compete with the small loan law, and those companies doing business under the small loan law are a credit to any community and entitled to the respect and cooperation of all. It is the so-called 'loan shark' that is playing havoc with the hopes and ambitions of our working classes, and it is to this class of citizens that the credit union offers remedy.

Lauds Railway Employees.

"It has been said that railroad employees are especially susceptible to the wiles of loan sharks. They are just as good citizens as any other class, and I do not believe that conditions affecting them are any different from those affecting other classes of employees. But if it is true that loan sharks, so-called, have a strangle hold on railroad employees generally, it is not true as to the employees of the Atlanta, Brimingham and Coast railroad. Our credit union sees to that.

"Morris plan banks appeal to the general public. Credit unions appeal only to employee groups or indivduals having common cause. We heartily indorse the credit union law as a constructive step by the state of Georgia in aiding credits to a highly respectable class of its citizens. Properly conducted, credit unions can teach the lesson of thrift, and, after all, the only difference between a good citizen and a bad citizen is the ability to live within income.

"The A., B. & C. Railway Employees' Credit union, serving employees of the Atlanta, Birmingham and Coast railroad, has a membership of 800, with assets of $60,000, although only one year old. Savings accounts almost equal loans, and the time is not far off when savings will greatly exceed loans, because the lesson of thrift is gradually being learned by our members."

Get Wonderful Results.

The following statement was made by M. G. Johnston secretary and treasurer of the Georgia league and president of the Atlanta Postal Credit union:

"Immediately after the enactment of the credit union law employees of the Atlanta postoffice applied for and received the first charter granted in the state of Georgia. This charter was issued by S. G. McLendon, secretary of state, and delivered to Postmaster Edwin K. Large and a committee of postal employees. The Atlanta Postal Credit union was organized November 3, 1925, and began business with 146 members and a capital of $447. The membership has increased gradually until our organization now consists of 435 members, with a paid in capital of more than $25,000. These funds have been loaned to members for various purposes such as sickness, purchasing homes, automobiles and going to night schools.

"One of the most wonderful results obtained by the Atlanta Postal Credit union is the spirit of cooperation and friendship existing among its members. Our postmaster, Mr. Large, has given our organization his hearty indorsement and is one of our most enthusiastic members."

Steel Union Grows.

G. E. Thrash, president of the Atlanta Steel Credit union, furnished the following resume of mutual banking activities among employees of the Atlantic Steel company:

"The Atlantic Steel company employees organized a credit union on January 1 of this year and, after three months of operation, report wonderful progress. They now have 249 shareholders and 49 depositors and have been able to accommodate 80 of their members with loans. They have loaned $5,505.24 since January 1. Their large volume of business is shown by their average receipts of $750 per week at this time. The credit union is highly praised by employees because of the opportunity it affords them of conveniently saving, thereby promoting thrift, and a sound business basis upon which they might help their fellow-workmen through these loans.

"Due to the low rate of the shares, which is $5 each, and can be paid for at the small rate of 25 cents per week, all men are enabled to invest in the institution. And the banking features which allows them to make deposits as low as 25 cents, upon which they are given 4 per cent interest, makes it interesting to them from a banking standpoint on a small basis. Another feature is the convenience of the bank. As it is located on the premises of the Atlantic Steel company, the men are able to attend to their banking during work hours. The main feature is that the men are able to borrow money from the union for constructive and providential purposes at a very reasonable rate of interest.

First Mill Union.

The first credit union to be established at a Georgia cotton mill was organized March 30, 1926, by employees of the Exposition Cotton mills, under the name Exposition Cotton Mills Employees' Credit Union, a statement from officials of the association reveals. "The books were opened for business April 3, with a paid capital of $1,300 and 148 members, who subscribed 465 shares of stock at $5 per share, to be paid in weekly installments. The officers, directors and committees of the organization were selected from the employees of the mill only, and every department of the mill is represented either on the board of directors or one of the committees.

"The report of the treasurer to the annual stockholders' meeting, which was held in January, 1927, showed that the membership had increased to more than 200, and that the credit union had earned approximately 11 per cent on the paid in capital. After paying a substantial dividend the percentage of earnings set aside for surplus was twice the legal requirements."

Negroes' Home Stripped of Goods Worth $2,000 As Security for Loan of $15 by Local Firm

When Emma Fluellen, negress, residing at 338 Griffin street, S. W., failed to pay "indorser's fees and interest" of $4.19 for a 30-day loan of $15, her household goods valued at $2,000 were seized by a local loan firm. Upper photo shows Tom Fluellen, the woman's husband, in the stripped home and (below) the frame cottage which the colored couple were compelled to leave. A white jury returned a verdict favoring the Fluellens after five minutes' deliberation.

BY HERB M'CUSKER.

Despite repeated efforts made during the past 20 years by indignant individuals and organizations to drive from the city alleged law-violating "loan sharks" and money lenders who, it is claimed, prey upon the ignorance of illiterate whites and negroes and openly flaunt their usurious practices by claiming legality before the courts, court activities of the past week and claims made by the Atlanta Legal Aid society disclosed continued presence of a number of such firms in this city.

Court records and investigation reports revealed by the Atlanta Legal Aid society through J. L. R. Boyd, general counsel of that body, Saturday portended to show in appalling vividness a continuous situation which it is claimed, casts an undeniable indictment upon Atlanta and Atlantans while it is permitted to exist.

Disclosures brought to the attention of the Atlanta public by Mr. Boyd comprise the following:

1—A new group of organized "loan sharks" is now doing a flourishing business in Atlanta in open defiance of the acts of the general assembly of Georgia of 1904, 1908 and 1920, much to the detriment of legitimate loan firms.

2—Scores of helpless negroes are contributing various sums of money to these new loan shark rings as interest on ridiculously small loans. The alleged victims are compelled to pay as much as 30 per cent interest per month and 360 per cent per year—despite the fact that the highest rate of interest that can legally be charged on loans of $300 or under by licensed money lenders is 3 1-2 per cent per month or 42 per cent per annum, and that only to be calculated on unpaid balances.

3—Unfortunate victims of loan sharks become unable to pay the high monthly rates of interest and are prohibited by the loan companies the benefit of the law allowing epayment of loans on the installment plan, they thus becoming involved in bail-trover proceedings. Often, their household goods under false affidavits are seized and they are thrown in jail—while, ironically enough, state officers are thus compelled to serve as executors for the usurers.

Household Goods Seized.

4—When Emma Fluellen, aged negress who resided at 388 Griffin street, S. W., failed to pay $19.13 for a 30-day loan of $15, her household goods valued at $2,000 were seized and taken to a warehouse while the woman averted going to jail only by producing bond.

5—Another negro woman who could not pay 27 1-2 per cent monthly interest on a loan of $10 was placed behind the bars and her household goods, said to have been worth several hundred dollars, were seized.

6—An agent for one loan company is alleged to have posed as a government representative and through "base fraud and deception" to have persuaded illiterate negroes to accept a voluntary loan in exchange for which they were induced to sign a bill of sale to property, signing under the impression that they were merely giving a receipt for the loan.

7—A court official of Macon, Ga., is president of a loan company whose firm name is utilized as a substitute creditor in dealing with ignorant negroes of Atlanta.

Continue Operation.

8—Such companies continue to operate despite indictments pending from not one but several grand juries;

9—Bribes were proffered to negroes against whom the misdemeanor of alleged usury was practiced in an effort to get them to leave the city and not testify in recent actions as to their victimizing.

History of Case Shown.

In the trial Thursday before Judge Anton Etheridge, filed by J. L. Morgan & Co. against Emma Fluellen, evidence was produced jointly by Mr. Boyd, representing the Legal Aid society and Morris Macks and J. A. Warbington, defense counsel, which purported to show the following history of the case:

On or about November 19, 1926, an agent of the Morgan company called on the Fluellen woman at her frame cottage on Griffin street and told the woman that he was a "government man," had heard about the loss of her mother and was instructed to advance her $15 until she could repay it with money received from "insurance on her mother."

According to the woman's story, she later signed a paper, under the impression that it was a receipt for the $15. It later turned out to be a bill of sale, defense counsel contended, which listed the household goods owned by the woman. Thirty days later, the woman said, the same agent appeared and notified her that in order to repay the loan, she would have to pay an additional $4.19.

Find House Stripped.

On the same day Tom Fluellen, the woman's husband, said he was summoned from work and upon hastening home, found his house stripped and his wife absent. Later he learned that she had been carried to the court house where she succeeded in furnishing her own bond and thus averted being placed in jail.

In the petition filed by the woman's counsel, the following household goods were names as having been seized in security for the original $15 loan and subsequent indebtedness:

Three iron bedsteads; three bed springs; six mattresses; three oak dressers; three oak washstands; 10 straight chairs; four rocking chairs; four center tables; three art squares; two trunks and their contents; one oak dining table; one oak sideboard; one kitchen safe; one kitchen table; one range; one oil stove; one clock; one Pathe machine; one Columbia graphonola; one piano; one mahogany wardrobe; one mahogany chifforobe; one mahogany table, and one wicker library suite.

Case Quickly Won.

In her complaint, the woman stated that E. L. Fowler, an attorney for the Morgan company, came to her house and asked that all proceedings be dropped and that she could receive her goods if she would say nothing more about the case.

In the meantime, the Atlanta Legal Aid society interested itself in the case and with Attorneys Macks and Warbington, gathered evidence which later won the case in the record time of five minutes of jury deliberation.

In the Fluellen woman's complaint she further stated that she had been advised that even though she cared to repay the original $15 loan, she would also be compelled to pay $4.19 interest for 30 days, $22 for dravage of her seized furniture and $6.25 court costs, making a total of $47.38 in exchange for the use of $15 for 30 days.

In case No. 209043 in the municipal court of Atlanta, J. L. Morgan and company against Ida Starr, statements in the defense petition claimed that the woman on January 1, 1926, borrowed $10 from the company operating in conjunction with the Southern Loan and Real Estate corporation, and that she signed a bill of sale after an agent had listed her household goods. She was told, the petition stated, that she was signing a receipt. On the following July, after having made an affidavit that Ida Starr was about to "eloign" or remove property of the J. L. Morgan and company, the company took possession of the goods and Ida Starr was taken to jail, having been unable to make bond to cover all the articles listed.

Vicious Practices Charged.

"These cases are only two of the many that have come to the attention of the Atlanta Legal Aid society," Mr. Boyd declared Saturday. "Atlanta people would be astounded if they realized the extent of the inhuman and vicious practices being operated here upon whites and blacks.

"Scheming loan sharks are not easily caught. They set up an office in cheap quarters and by paying, say $100 a year, do business under the name of a 'substantial creditor' posing as a licensed loan firm. A partition is placed between the two offices. On one side sits the 'endorser' and on the other the 'banker.' Through a subtle juggling of the words of the law, certain 'fees' are charged for pretended 'endorsements.' And once the ignorant negro borrows a small sum of money, he is compelled to become a 'repeater' and before he gets out of it, he will have paid the sharps many times the amount of the original loan.

Drive Out Sharks.

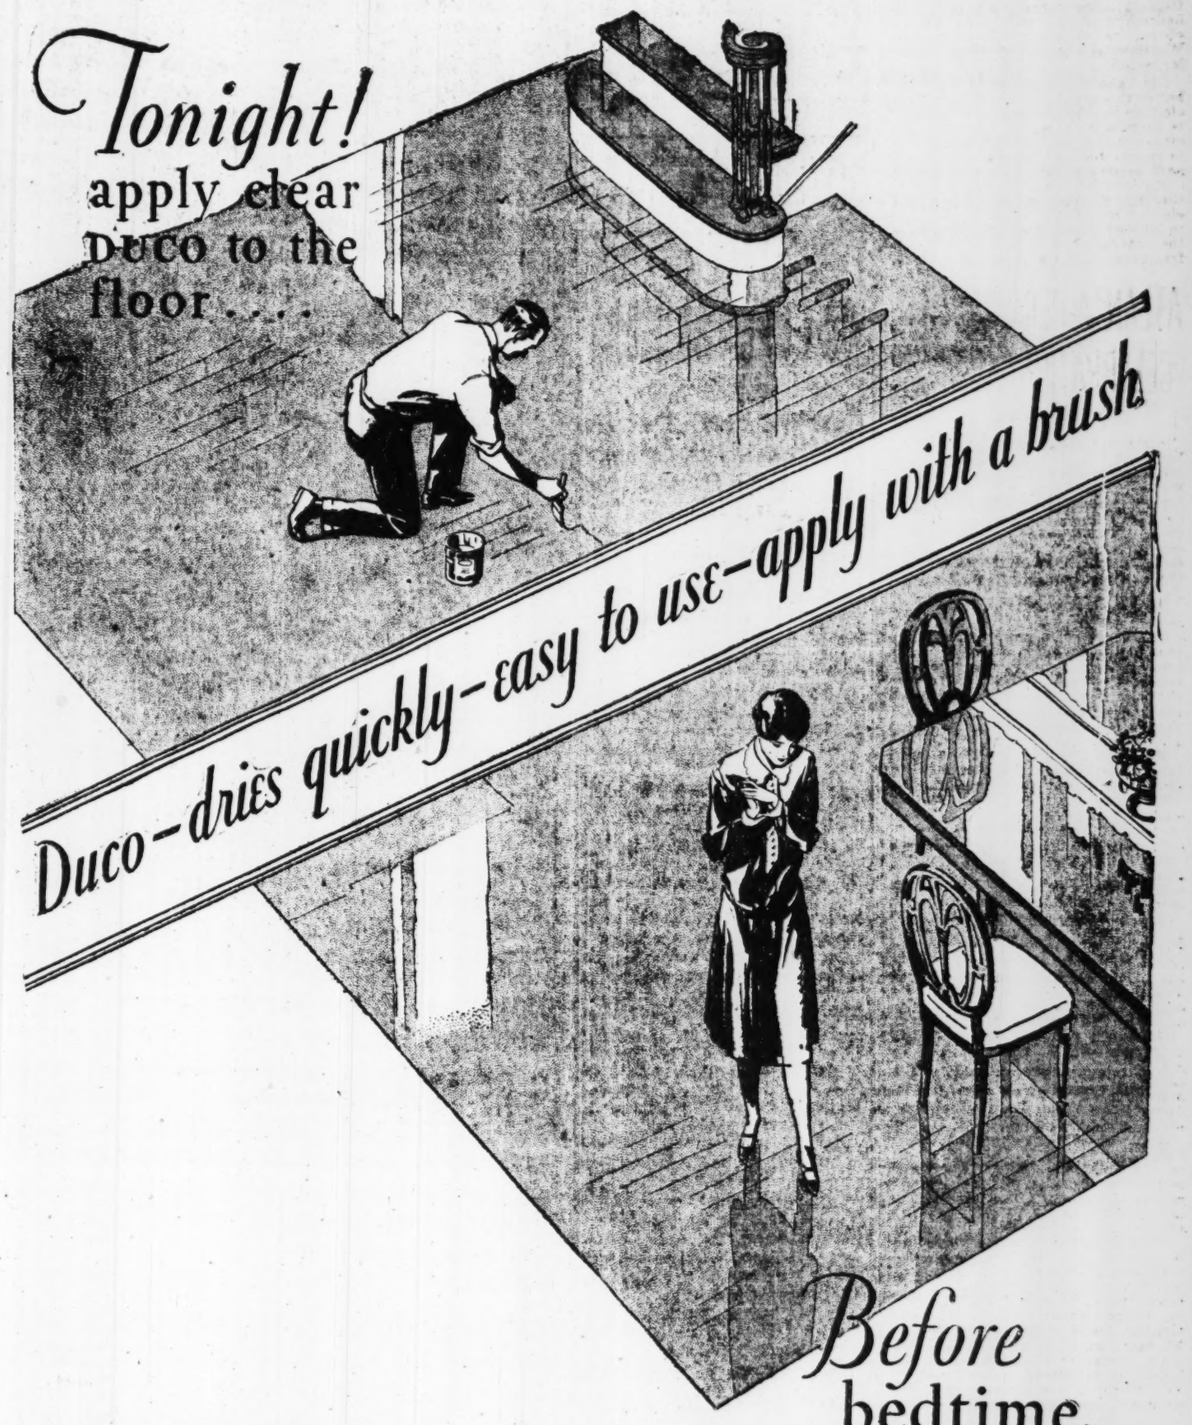

"Many Atlantans believe loan sharks cannot be driven from the city, simply because others have failed to do it. There have been notoriety-seekers who have started such campaigns only to abandon them—some have been bought off. But the Atlanta Legal Aid society is going to aid the prosecution of the work until all companies operate under the law. Georgia has as good loan laws as any other state in the union and the officials are preparing to enforce them to the letter.

"Those loan companies who are licensed and operate according to the dictates of the law will certainly not be molested. Doubtless, they will be pleased to see the others wiped out. For loan companies can make money under the present law which allows 3 1-2 per cent per month interest, even though such interest is required to be calculated on the unpaid balances and not on the original principal."

Atlantans are urged by Mr. Boyd to cooperate with the Legal Aid society in its campaign against usurers. Reports may be made to him at his office in the courthouse.

M'MICHAEL ENTERS RACE FOR COUNCIL

J. R. McMichael, for the past 20 years a resident of the first ward and a member of the city democratic committee for several terms, Saturday announced his candidacy for councilman from the first ward subject to the democratic primary of May 25. He is ofering for the post now held by Sam Wardlaw, who has not entered the race for reelection.

The candidate is at present a member of the Carnegie library board, an elective post by the city council. He is prominent in secret and fraternal circles of the city and has been active in church and civic movements for the past several years.

Rumors Saturday were to the effect that Mr. Wardlaw would not seek reelection but would throw his support to McMichael who entered the race at the solicitation of a large number of friends in the first.

ATLANTA-PERRY ROAD CELEBRATION PLANNED

Fitzgerald, Ga., April 9.—(Special.) Increased interest in the celebration of the completed paving of the Dixie highway from Perry to Atlanta is being aroused in the south Georgia counties, whose roads link up with the Dixie highway at Perry and Macon and large delegations from these counties will join the motorcade on the final lap from Macon on the morning of May 25.

Macon's Chamber of Commerce, through its highway committee and civic clubs is planning a cordial reception for the south Georgia visitors and arrangements will probably be made to hold a convention in the new city auditorium, where prominent speakers and a musical program will form a part of the entertainment for the motorcade on the night of May 24.

Fitzgerald's sixty-piece community band, Miss Marjorie Owens, contralto and Burr Stokes, baritone, will furnish musical programs for the occasion, arrangements being made to have the music broadcast from Macon's new station at Mercer university and from WSB, in Atlanta. This organization will also furnish music at each of the cities where stops will be made along the route.

The motorcade plans to leave Macon at 10 a. m. eastern time and stop at Forsyth, Barnesville, Griffin, and at the county lines of Henry and Spalding, where the last concrete on the highway will have been laid. The executive committee, selected at Griffin on April is working out detailed entertainment features along the route. A complete schedule will be worked out for arrival and departure from each stopping place, so that the communities interested may make proper preparation for the reception of the motorists.

Arrangements have been made with Chief James L. Beavers of the Atlanta police department for piloting the motorcade through Atlanta with motorcycle officers and led by the Atlanta police band, which will meet the motorists at Hapeville.

The committee in charge are, H. N. Mitchell, of Bibb; Mrs. Orin Massey, Macon; Walter H. Stewart, W. T. Winn, and Fred Houser, of Atlanta; Isidor Gelders, Fitzgerald; Dr. M. Dodge, Marietta; J. A. Burnett, Griffin; David Arnold, Hampton; S. H. Summers, of Barnesville; L. Y. T. Nash, Decatur; C. A. Holmes, Culloden; H. G. Moore, Conwell and C. W. Wright of the state highway department, located at Griffin.

ARMY OF GUARDS PROTECTS IL DUCE ON PUBLIC TOURS

Rome, April 9.—(AP)—Plain clothes detectives, stationed ten feet apart on both sides of the streets, stand by when Premier Mussolini walks or rides through the public thoroughfares of the Eternal City. This is a noticeable aspect of the protective measures enforced on behalf of the premier. They apparently have been strengthened during the past few months, although no official announcement has been made of the fact.

The streets are patrolled by a veritable army and grim agents of the law, who make their appearance at their stations long before the time of the premier's arrival. They permit the movement of traffic through the guarded thoroughfares, but they carefully scrutinize all passers-by, particularly those who bear the aspect of being foreigners.

Needs of Underprivileged Children To Get Attention in Georgia 'Week'

Youngsters at Georgia Children's Home society who receive share in state's attention during "Under Privileged Children's Week," beginning Monday. They are being cared for until family homes can be found to adopt them and take them out of the "under-privileged" class.

For the purpose of conveying an Easter message of hope to homeless and neglected orphans throughout the state of Georgia, two humanitarian drives will be launched Monday, one under the guidance of Governor Clifford Walker, who has designated this week as "Underprivileged Children's Week" and the other sponsored by the Georgia Children's Home society in 60 Georgian counties.

Committees of the children's society will carry on the campaign for assistance for abandoned children through Easter and have announced intention of enrolling 10,000 new members in the work. Simultaneously homes will be sought for many orphans.

Arrangements for the campaign had been completed Saturday in all larger counties of the state except Fulton and Chatham where the Atlanta and Savannah Community Chests provide for the society's service in their own counties.

Quotas Are Assigned.

A quota has been assigned each county in proportion to its wealth and population and one member of the state board of directors will be elected from each county which raises its quota.

Five classes of membership have been established. Life membership is bestowed to subscribers of $500, the sum necessary for the rescue of two children, their care and treatment in the society's receiving home to prepare them to enter family homes, finding and investigating prospective family homes for adoption and extending protective supervision, as required by law, until they are able to care for themselves.

Honorary membership is conferred on subscribers of $100, firm or corporation membership on subscribers of $25 annually for three years, annual membership on subscribers of $5 annually for three years and junior membership on subscribers of $1 who are under 18 years of age.

The society is the only state-wide organization which goes throughout Georgia to seek out and save destitute children, it is said, and its service has been given to nearly 5,000 children in 105 counties in Georgia and new homes, with foster parents of their own, have been found for 1,500 children from 92 different counties.

Society's Work Praised.

The state department of public welfare, in its report on the society's work last year, called attention to the fact that the support of the society had not kept pace with the growing demands for its service and specifically recommended state-wide organization to insure adequate provision for the work throughout the state. The extension program was undertaken in that recommendation with the present effort to enroll a supporting membership of 10,000.

Governor Walker has proclaimed the week officially, declaring "the treatment accorded to the child today will determine whether he will develop into a benefactor of society or a criminal and outlaw, a menace and an expense."

No set program has been laid down for observance of the week, as it is a new thing in Georgia. The Georgia Children's Home society, the only state-wide agency which is finding homes for adoption of orphaned, abandoned and destitute children, is making practical application of the spirit of the week with a state-wide appeal for supporting members to enable extension of its service of relief to such children, many of whom it has been unable to help because of lack of funds.

Pre-Easter sermons on the message of Him who said that "Whosoever receiveth one of these receiveth me" will be preached in many churches throughout the state. Radio talks on child welfare are to be delivered over WSB, the Atlanta Journal station.

County executive committees of the Georgia Children's Home society have arranged talks before civic clubs and other special observance for the week.

Three-Cornered Legal Fight

IMPORTANT SCRIPT BEFORE N. Y. COURT WEDNESDAY

For Signature of Gwinnett

A three-cornered legal battle for possession of a signature of Button Gwinnett, one of the three Georgia signers of the declaration of independence, will be staged before the New York court of appeals at Albany Wednesday, it was announced Saturday by T. R. Gress, assistant attorney general of Georgia. The Anderson Galleries of New York are suing Dr. A. S. Rosenbach, also of New York, for $22,500, the price he bid for Gwinnett's signature at an auction. The state of Georgia was made a party to the suit when it served notice on the litigants that the signature of Gwinnett involved is attached to a legal document which is the property of the state of Georgia and which was stolen from the archives of this state.

Assistant Attorney General Gress and Miss Ruth Blair, state historian, will leave Sunday for Albany to attend the hearing. The document containing the signature of Gwinnett was turned over to the Anderson Galleries by the Manning estate of Philadelphia.

Gwinnett's signature disappeared from the archives of the state of Georgia some time before 1919. When the sale of the signature for $4,200 was reported to the Manning estate in New York the custodian investigated and found that the prized document, handed down to Georgia officials after the United States had become independent of Great Britain, was missing.

The Manning estate placed the document in the hands of the Anderson Galleries, Inc., for public sale, and it brought $22,500.

Gwinnett, the highly educated son of Dr. and Mrs. Samuel Gwynedd, was reared in Bristol, England. After prominence in colonial affairs in Georgia and a trip to the continental congress, he incurred the animosity of one General Lachlam McIntosh. During a heated session of the assembly, General McIntosh called Gwinnett a "scoundrel and a lying rascal." Gwinnett challenged McIntosh to a duel. Each shot the other in the leg. Gangrene set in on Gwinnett and he died three days later, on May 19, 1776.

Charles Francis Jenkins, millionaire Philadelphia publisher, will accompany Mr. Gress and Miss Blair from New York city to Albany and if Georgia is successful in retrieving the document, the state will receive a bid for the signature from Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Gress says. Mr. Jenkins is author of a book on Button Gwinnett.

Emory Students Plan First Spring Holiday To Be Held on May 19

Emory University, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—Emory students have been granted a spring holiday by the president and council of deans, to be held on May 19. The holiday will be sponsored by the Y. M. C. A. The holiday will be celebrated by the students on the campus with different forms of amusment during the day and at night.

A tentative program for the day, as drawn up by the executive committee, will include booths and plays arranged by the different campus organizations; a championship baseball game in the afternoon, potato races and other field events, boxing and wrestling bouts and a glee club performance that night. Each organization entering a booth will be charged a fee and all profits go to the organization.

The executive committee will make out a final program and will have supervision over the whole festival.

This will be the first celebration of this kind to be held at Emory university.

URBAN LEAGUE WEEKLY BULLETIN

The public is invited to attend the Inter-Collegiate matinee musical this afternoon from 4 to 5 o'clock at the Paramount theater on Auburn avenue. This musical is being given for the benefit of Atlanta university. Musical talent from all of the colleges of the city will appear on the program under the personal direction of Professor Kemper Harreld. A silver offering will be taken at the door.

The Atlanta Charity, Education and Recreation association had its annual meeting at Wheat Street Baptist church on March 31 at 3:30 o'clock. The purpose of the meeting was to elect officers for the ensuing year and to appoint committees and in general make plans for the annual outing, June 6, at Lakewood park. This organization has for a number of years planned and conducted an outing at Lakewood that provides a splendid program of recreation and entertainment for the thousands of men, women and children, who look toward it and take advantage of this occasion. An entrance fee of 25 cents for adults and 15 cents for children is charged. The net receipts for this outing, after the necessary bills have been paid, form a treasury from which contributions are made to various welfare organizations through the Community Chest. The election this year was the most peaceful and harmonious that has taken place in a number of years. As a result it is expected that perhaps the largest attendance in its history will be recorded at the outing this year. The next meeting of the association will be held on April 21 at 3:30 o'clock at the Wheat Street Baptist church. All persons who are in harmony with the purpose of this organization are eligible for membership. Ministers are especially urged to bring before their congregation the spirit characterizing the association this year and urge them to become active participating members to aid its operation. Fraternal organizations and business enterprises are also invited to take a large part in the affairs of this institution.

The Well Bay clinic, conducted by the city, state and federal departments of health and the Atlanta Urban league, continues to draw a large number of mothers and babies, who come for information and advice on matters relating to food, clothing and their general physical and social well-being. Nurse Sadie Powell is carrying information concerning the clinic to mothers and expectant mothers to all parts of the city. Contacts have been made with 112 families. The clinic is held every Tuesday and Thursday at 2:30 o'clock on the fourth floor of the Herndon building. Some of the leading physicians are going their volunteer service consistently.

Field secretary, Jesse O. Thomas, returned to the city from St. Louis, Mo., the early part of the week, where he attended the 16th annual conference of the National Urban league.

The following persons of Atlanta were among those attending the Founders' day exercises at Tuskegee institute: Dr. W. W. Alexander, Editor B. J. Davis, Secretary T. J. Ferguson, Cashier W. F. Boddie. This annual occasion represents memorial services held annually in memory of Dr. Booker T. Washington, founder of Tuskegee institute. Professor Edwin Mims, of Nashville, Tenn., was the speaker this year. He discussed with convincing assurance the changing social order.

COMMODORE CONCERT TO GIVE "TRAVIATA"

One of the outstanding features of the Commodore Ensemble Concert under the directon of Bernhard Levitow to be broadcast by WJZ at 7 o'clock, Palm Sunday evening, April 10, will be in the rendition of the principal motives from Verdi's opera, "La Traviata."

"La Traviata" is based on the romance and drama "La Dame aux Camilias," by Alexandre Dumas, Fils, which is better known in America as "Camille."

In opening this program the Commodore Ensemble will play "Nocturne and Scherzo" from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" Suite.

ATLANTIAN ATTACKS NEW CITY CHARTER

Two editorials, one, "A Proposed New City Charter" and the other, "Why Not Atlanta for the Next Democratic National Convention," feature the Easter edition of The Atlantian, which has just come off the press.

In addition to those two feature editorials, the issue contains an editorial on "Easter" and many other interesting articles.

In the proposed new city charter article it is claimed that Atlanta is badly managed and that conditions can never be improved until a lot of alleged "patent medicine remedies" in the shape of new charters are dropped.

P. J. Hjort, Noted Authority Writes Article on 'Roses'

Through the interest and upon invitation of Mrs. Prince Webster, at whose Wesley road home the Peachtree Garden club held its March meeting, was secured P. J. Hjort, a noted authority on roses, who came up from Thomasville to give a special talk on this subject, which was filled with valuable suggestions to horticulturists in general, to whom the subject of roses is one of vital importance.

Mr. Hjort's paper, which treats of every phase of rose culture and will aid every horticulturist in Atlanta, is as follows:

"I hope to be able to tell you something that will be helpful to you in growing roses in Atlanta. I am not familiar with Atlanta conditions, but I am familiar with conditions at Thomasville, and I will tell you how we grow roses there, and I think it is generally conceded that we grow some good ones. In telling you how we prepare the rose bed, set the plants, cultivate, spray, water and prune them, you will doubtless conclude that I have laid down a set of rules for rose-growing. The term "rules" is confusing, and it may suggest that rose-growing is difficult. I prefer to use the term, "principles." Recognizing certain principles, and fitting them to local conditions, gets us away from the idea that it is hard to grow roses. Unless rose-growing in Atlanta is vastly different from what it is in Thomasville, and I do not believe it to be, success is not hard to attain.

"At Thomasville there is no more successful rose-grower than William Miller, a busy structural engineer, who feeds his soul by such activities as rose-growing and planting miles of beautiful white dogwoods on the streets of Thomasville at no profit. Would that every city in Georgia had its William Miller! Mr. Miller's training taught him the value of a thorough foundation. So he does a thorough job of preparing the rose bed. If the soil has sufficient clay, and it usually has in our section, he adds rich garden loam or woods earth, where leaves or pine straw have decayed, together with a liberal quantity of well-rotted cow lot manure. These are thoroughly mixed, except that the final layer is of top soil only, and into this top layer the plants are set. As new roots develops they reach down to the fertilizer for feeding.

Adequate Preparation.

"There are those who scoff at such careful preparation. A writer in Garden and Home Builder for March carries this idea to extremes. My observation convinces me that adequate preparation is the price of success. Therefore, I am going to tell you how to prepare a rose bed. The bed should be dug to a depth of 2 1-2 feet. The top soil should be laid aside, and also the best soil below it. The bottom soil, if found to be of poor quality, should be discarded. A layer of equal parts of good soil and old well-rotted cow lot manure is used for the bottom layer, then a layer of good soil, then more topsoil and well-rotted cow lot manure, and finally a finishing layer of top soil. The building of this rose bed is on the principle that the fertilizer should be well mixed with the soil in the lower two-thirds of the bed, and the plants should be set in the top soil with no fertilizer. As roots develop they will get the benefit of the fertilizer.

"It is true that roses do not like wet feet, and where the rose bed has to be located in a rather low place, a layer of rocks or broken stone, a depth of six inches, should be laid at the bottom of the rose bed. Drainage is emphasized in English books but it is to be remembered that there is a general dampness there much of the time, a condition with which we do not have to contend here. Also English books will tell you that a rose bed should be dug to a depth of three feet, which is unnecessary here, as the rose stocks do not send roots to a great depth, but spread more.

"If either barnyard fertilizer or leaf mold, or both, are not available, the rose bed should at least be well dug, and bone meal may be used, two pounds to the bush. It should be stirred into the surface around the plants, and the rains or watering will wash the substance down, and give the plants the feeding. While bone meal is an excellent fertilizer, it acts slowly, and if used in the spring it is best to have it in combination with quick-acting fertilizer. We use to good advantage the combination 8-4-4, a well known formula of commercial fertilizer, which may be purchased from dealers. Thorough preparation of the soil will usually take care of the fertilizing problem the first year. After that the roses should be fertilized in late winter for spring growth, and in late summer for fall growth. During dry weather water the roses thoroughly twice a week, do not give a superficial watering daily, as this draws the feed roots to the surface, where the sun scalds them, causing injury to the plants.

"Rose aphis and thrips are more or less prevalent in the entire south; to kill them spray with a tobacco preparation—the spray we use is Black Leaf 40, a teaspoonful to the gallon of water. Spray the under side of the leaves, and the soft tips, where these insects are to be found. Black spot and powdery mildew are the prevalent fungus diseases. Black spot may be controlled by spraying with Bordeaux mixture. If this is used at pruning time in late winter, spraying both plants and the ground thoroughly after all dead leaves are destroyed, the result is often that there will be little or no black spot the following season. The 1922 American Rose Annual prints in its complete article on rose insects and diseases, another treatment for black spot. Using a dust gun, the plants are to be dusted with a mixture of nine parts dusting sulphur to one part powdered lead arsenate. This treatment, begun before new growth appears and repeated each two weeks during the summer, will also protect against powdery mildew and certain insects.

Cultivating the Soil.

"Heavy soils will bake and become hard in a dry time, and unless mulching is done, this top crust should be stirred from time to time. We prefer the mulching plan. A good coat of leaves or pinestraw about the plants holds the moisture and prevents the ground from becoming hard. I believe it is a good plan to keep the roses well mulched during the summer, for the reason just stated; and also because many gardeners, especially you ladies, are away from home, and care of the roses may be somewhat irregular, if not actually neglected during your absence. In catalogues and other rose literature you may have noted the terms 'Budded Roses,' and 'Own-Root Roses.' It is well to know something about the difference between them. Budded roses are those grown on stock roses, while own-root roses are grown from cuttings. The superiority of budded roses has long been recognized in the south, and they are coming to be more used in the north and east. The objection usually raised to them is that they are apt to develop "suckers," which choke out the rose, finally leaving only the root stock. This is overcome by using stocks which do not send up sprouts from lateral roots, and by a process known as 'disbudding.' By disbudding is meant that all the lower eyes on the stock rose cutting are cut out before it is planted. Only one or two eyes are left at the top of the cutting, through which growth is to be made, and when the bud of the rose variety to be propagated is inserted, it is put in below the eyes that remain on the root stock. Finally when the stock top is cut off the following winter, there remains only the rose bud, which develops and makes the top. By this process suckers are eliminated, except in rare cases where a lower eye may have been overlooked in the disbudding process. The method we use is in general practice with all reliable nurseries growing budded roses.

Principles and Common Sense.

"While I have told you how some of us grow roses at Thomasville, I do not undertake to fix any rules for rose-growing in Atlanta, nor do I advise going by the rules of any book. But I do believe that we should get clearly in our minds basic principles, and these, together with the use of common sense, will serve as a guide to successful rose culture. One rose grower tells me: 'I have just figured it out this way: I prepare my rose beds thoroughly, plant the roses to a depth that will cover the bud union, add fertilizer when I think it necessary, water in a dry time, spray with tobacco for insects and Bordeaux for fungus, and just how and when to do these things is the exercise of judgment.' Do not think there is anything difficult or mysterious about it, one just has to 'think,' and that is necessary for any undertaking. And do not be confused by the rather 'bookish' word, 'principles.' Principles are simply certain general facts, universally true, and adapted to specific conditions. In the garden world success crowns the efforts of the one who has the patience, industry and will to adapt general principles to her local conditions and needs.

Rose Varieties.

"I like to read everything I can about roses, and I like to keep an open mind. Because Captain Geo. C. Thomas, than whom there is no greater authority in America, lists Rhea Reid as one of the successful roses for the southeast, and it is a miserable failure at Thomasville, does not prejudice me against his valuable work. It is remarkable how generally correct he is, having undertaken work of so wide a scope. Rhea Reid is probably all right for a part of the southeast, and if I were to have prepared a list of varieties I might have done a certain section an injustice. Capt. Thomas does list those wonderful roses which succeed at Thomasville: Radiance, Red Radiance, Mrs. Charles Bell, Rose Marie, Etoile de France, and others, which I am told thrive in Atlanta. I could not give you a very complete list of varieties suited to Atlanta, but I would recommend, in addition to those already mentioned, Killarney Queen, Jonkheer J. L. Monck, Countess of Gosford, Lady Alice Stanley, Lady Ashtown, Betty, Columbia, National Emblem, Hoosier Beauty, Hadley, Laurent Carle, Frau Karl Druschki, W. Freeland Kendrick, Kaiserin Auguste Viktoria, Mrs. A. R. Waddell and Luxembourg. I would like to have from some of you a list of other varieties that do well here. There is a great deal more satisfaction to be gained in planting a dozen roses of one successful variety than in planting the same number and using some of doubtful character, but it is well to experiment with roses to a certain extent, as sometimes a little-known variety will suit a certain condition and become a great favorite."

Il Duce Plans To Excavate Buried City

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Rome, April 9.—Premier Mussolini today announced that excavations at Herculaneum would commence in May, with the formal inauguration by the king, and that two Roman galleys sunk in Lake Nemi would be recovered. The announcement came in the course of a discourse before the Royal Roman society for the history of the Fatherland, of which Premier Mussolini received a diploma of membership this morning. In recovering the gold and Roman ships Lake Nemi will be drained to a depth of 22 meters by means of a tunnel which will discharge the water into the neighboring Lake Albano. This will enable the recovery not only of the ships but also of precious relics of Roman times in submerged villas.

"The fascist regime seized the past and present to prepare for a glorious future," concluded the duce.

Woman Bitten By Huge Spider Becomes Blind

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

Chicago, April 9.—Mrs. Cora Taylor, clerk in a Libertyville grocery, was in a hospital today recovering from shock and the bite of a tarantula. The giant spider leaped upon her as she trimmed bananas from a bunch. Within a few minutes she became blind and not until poison experts had worked over her for three hours did she regain her sight. The store was filled with women shoppers when Mrs. Taylor was bitten. She screamed and fainted as the spider darted across the floor, causing a panic. It was later captured.

GOV. AL SMITH TO ANSWER NOTE ON HIS BELIEFS

New York, April 9.—(AP)—Governor Smith's reply to the open letter sent to him by Charles C. Marshall, New York lawyer, asking him questions concerning his religious beliefs, will be made public on April 25, it was learned today. The reply was sent to the Atlantic Monthly, Boston magazine, which printed Mr. Marshall's letter.

Among other things, Mr. Marshall asked the governor to reconcile his religious beliefs with the oath of office required of the president of the United States. The governor is a Roman Catholic.

The governor, here today after a strenuous session of the legislature, declined to discuss his letter. He said that the writing of it, amid the high pressure of the closing days of the legislature, "took one solid night out of my life."

The governor said the editor of the magazine had acknowledged receipt of the letter with these words: "Your letter is a notable public document. The questions have been answered in a straightforward and unflinching manner."

Father's Club Formed To Stop Student Suicides

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution and The Chicago Tribune.)

New York, April 9.—Fathers should visit their sons at college, keep in closer relationship with them, and thereby prevent many youthful suicides. To accomplish this there should be a fathers' club.

This is the opinion of Magistrate Charles Tolleris and also of Judge Charles C. Nott, of the court of general sessions. And the first fathers' club was formed last night, it became known today.

The action follows publication of essays written by undergraduates in all parts of the country analyzing the causes of student depression. Many students recommend the action now begun—the organization of closer relations between students, their parents and their teachers.

Twenty fathers of Cornell university students organized a fathers' club of the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity and elected Magistrate Tolleris president.

The members also planned to communicate with a similar fathers' club already in formation at the Delta chapter of the same fraternity at the University of Illinois.

Sponsors of the plan hope the clubs will prove "catching" as well as effective.

Magistrate Tolleris said present-day fathers are "woefully ignorant of the undergraduate life of their sons, of their college activities and of their associations.

"By means of this organization we propose to keep in closer contact with them," he added. "We hope to give them the benefits of our aid and counsel in their problems at college."

REED AND SAPIRO ENJOY DAY'S REST

Detroit, April 9.—(AP)—Worn by the strain of nine days of matching wits with each other, Aaron Sapiro, Chicago attorney, suing Henry Ford for $1,000,000 for alleged libel, and Senator James A. Reed, chief of the Ford counsel, relaxed and rested today for another siege of it next week. The week-end break in the four-week-old trial was a most welcome hiatus.

Senator Reed started the long cross-examination in his wonted manner, driving at Sapiro with a mixture of flashing keenness of perception, irony, sarcasm and at times, a gentle coo in his tones as he sought to trap the keen-witted, fast-thinking witness.

Yesterday the senator had slowed down physically. His voice was hoarse and he begged the indulgence of the court as he sat instead of standing. Sapiro, younger by a score of years, seemed fresher physically. In the keenness of Reed's attack and Sapiro's parrying of it there was no evidence of mental fatigue, however.

Potatoes was the week-end subject. All of yesterday Sapiro was questioned concerning the formation of the Idaho Potato Growers' Cooperative exchange.

Potatoes again will be the subject Monday and probably most of Tuesday.

Attorneys for both sides were agreed that Sapiro probably would continue under cross-examination virtually throughout next week.

After that Ford's appearance as the next witness will be demanded, according to William Henry Gallagher, chief of Sapiro's counsel.

BISHOP AND PHYSICIAN TO SPEAK AT EMORY

Emory University, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—Dr. Stewart R. Roberts, Atlanta physician, will deliver the baccalaureate address at the annual June commencement at Emory university this year. Commencement exercises will begin on Sunday, June 5, and close with the presentation of diplomas and the baccalaureate address on June 7. Bishop W. B. Beauchamp, of Southern Methodist church is scheduled to deliver the baccalaureate sermon.

According to tentative plans made public by the administration, Bishop Beauchamp will deliver his sermon at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, June 5. Monday, June 6, is designated as alumni day and the entire day will be devoted to reunions of the classes of 2's and 7's. Monday evening President and Mrs. Harvey W. Cox will entertain with a reception for the alumni and the graduating classes.

The graduating exercises will be held on Tuesday morning, June 7. At this time Dr. Roberts will deliver his baccalaureate address to the graduates. A list of the graduates has not been provided yet, but reports are that it will be a very large one. Dr. Roberts has just recently returned from his second trip to Europe in the interest of scientific research work. While in Europe on this last trip he spent three months in specialized study in Vienna, in addition to visiting all the large medical schools of the continent such as the University of Berlin. Dr. Roberts is a member of the board of regents of the American College of Physicians, and is former president of the Southern Medical association. Bishop Beauchamp came into prominence in 1919 when he directed the Centenary campaign of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. During this drive which lasted only eight days Bishop Beauchamp led the Methodists to subscribe $50,000,000, which was $15,000,000 more than the campaign's goal. He is a member of the Federal Council of Churches. Immediately after the world war he was the bishop in charge of the Methodist missions in the European war areas, and did much outstanding service in the stricken cities of northern France and Belgium. He is a resident of Atlanta.

CONFESSED KIDNAPER TELLS FRANK STORY

how he went to the child's room about 6 o'clock and took from the bureau certain little articles that could be easily recognized as belonging to her. These, he said, were to be used in his future communications with the father as evidence that he really had the child. With a calmness that belied his age the negro related that he hid in the basement of that house until the silence of midnight gave him an opportunity to steal back up the stairs and escape with the child.

A trip back to the basement, a blanket hastily snatched from a bed and he was away to the attic in his own home which for five days acted in the dual role of nursery and prison for little Virginia Jo.

With the child safely hidden in that musty attic which excluded the prying eyes of strangers, Lewis began the diplomatic negotiations with the father that were finally to bring that frantic parent to the designated spot with the correct amount of ransom money.

During those five days Lewis and Arthur, his 14-year-old brother, alternated as nurse for the little girl. According to Lewis she cried but little and when sobs would begin, a command to "shut up" always brought the desired result. He was emphatic in his denial that ether was given her at any time, giving argument to the theory advanced when three bottles of this fluid were found in his home.

Baby Well Fed.

That Lewis and his brother were plentiful providers of food was proven by the appearance and health of little Virginia Jo. Lewis, however, was lacking sadly as a wardrobe mistress since the same night-gown that Virginia Jo wore on the night of her abduction, was the garment that covered her little form on the Sunday night she was left on a minister's doorstep.

"Lewis, were you afraid to meet Mr. Frazier when you had made the appointment to bring you the money?"

"No sir. I was not a bit afraid. I knew that Mr. Frazier wanted his little girl back and that he would keep his promise to me not to bring any officers along."

Then followed a description of the broomstick scene, when with a handkerchief partly covering his face, he received the package of bills from Mr. Frazier and quickly turning, made his way home. He stated that he did not stop to count the money but noticed that the currency was made up in packets of $500 each and that there were enough such sheaves to make up the amount.

With the money in his pocket, he fairly flew over the ground to his home where he got his prisoner ready for the return journey, he said. Then, although the hour was still early and his way led along streets fairly well traveled, Lewis carried Virginia Jo to the minister's doorstep, rang the bell and vanished into the night.

Lewis Feels Safe.

With the money safe and his former prisoner home, Lewis felt safe; and safe he would have been, in all probability, if he had not made that one lone slip—Lewis spent some of that $3,333. Not a great deal, but enough to bring into their homes some of those bills, every one of which had been carefully recorded by serial numbers. Being a devout reader of the paper, Lewis kept up with the march of events and when, on Tuesday following the return of the child, he learned that the money had been marked he decided to go into other fields and convert his wealth into less incriminating securities. To that end, armed with $1,000, he boarded the train for Cincinnati and, in the few days he made that town his headquarters, used many of the tell-tale bills in the purchase of shirts, ties and other gaudy luxuries of his race.

Lewis then made his second big mistake. He returned to Chattanooga. Why? Because, according to him, he had transgressed the law a short time before and was out on $1,000 bond. But those two days between the time of the child's return and his trip to Cincinnati had proved his undoing. Those few accusing bills that his newly acquired wealth had enabled him to spend, had done the work and an alert drug clerk had already communicated with his enemies. And so it was but a few hours until his dreams of golden castles and a life of plenty had been changed into one of a hard cot and iron bars.

Odd Sum Explained.

"Did he intend to harm the child if Frazier had not come across?"

Not a chance. He never intended to harm a hair on her head and if the money had not been produced, he was just going to take the child back.

This gave rise to the question as to just why this youthful and dramatic kidnaper demanded such an odd sum as $3,333. According to Lewis, he fixed an odd amount to further impress Frazier.

That about sums up Lewis. Of Arthur there is little to say. He says little, has nothing of the personality of his older brother or as pleasant a manner. He evidently was under the complete rule of that brother, who admits as much.

With the end of the interview, Lewis was allowed to wander back to his hard cot and his dreams. That those dreams are not the rose-tinted hallucinations of a few days ago, goes without saying, for justice, hard co's and iron bars are wonderful destroyers of pleasant hopes.

IRATE G. O. P. HITS VICE PRESIDENT

Goff, republican, West Virginia, who resigned before leaving for the Orient.

"Even if the committee still were in existence," he said, "the senate has not given authority to the vice president to do more than designate the original five members of the committee. Under the rules of the senate, any vacancies must be filled by election by the senate itself.

"Furthermore, the presiding officer of the senate must act when presiding at a senate session. When the senate is not in session he has no authority whatever. Therefore, I regard the attempted appointment of Senator Fess (republican, Ohio) as a nullity."

Calling attention that the whole question was up for judicial decision in the federal courts in Pennsylvania on an action brought by the campaign committee itself, Reed declared all parties concerned "should await that decision before attempting further action."

There has been no indication that the campaign investigating committee intends to meet again until after the hearing late this month on that case which involves the obtaining from the commissioners of four counties of ballot boxes used in the Vare-Wilson senatorial election last November.

HOSTS OF LEGION PLAN PARIS TRIP

BY ALFRED P. RECK.

Washington, April 9.—United News.)—As the United States celebrates the tenth anniversary of her entry into the world war 30,000 veterans are again turning their eyes to Paris.

Next fall the French capital will witness its greatest peace-time invasion when swarms of former American doughboys pour into the country through five ports to take part in the Paris convention of the American Legion.

Estimates received at legion headquarters here indicate the maximum number which can be accommodated —30,000—will embark for the second A. E. F.

But there will be no crowded transports, with smoking and light restrictions, stealing cautiously through dangerous submarine zones, nor no shouts of "Hey, soldier, you can't stand there." The second A. E. F. is going over in style.

Thirty-seven of the finest boats afloat will carry the huge throng bent, not as before, on a mission of war and destruction, but on a joyful holiday and pilgrimage of homage.

The 30,000 war veterans are going to "do" Paris as it has never been "done" before and without the necessity of keeping the weather eye open for bothersome "M. P.'s," French gendarmes and officials.

But, underlying the holiday spirit, will be a deeper mission, legion officials say—that of visiting and paying homage to America's greatest overseas garrison, the military cemeteries, where 30,045 American soldiers are buried.

Following the convention, which will be held September 19-25 in the Grand Palais, huge auditorium near Eiffel tower, familiar to hundreds of thousands of Americans, the legionnaires will scatter to various sections of France hallowed by memories of war-torn days.

KANSAS TOWN HONORS THREE IN HERO DISPUTE

Walnut, Kans., April 9.—(AP)—Rather than stir up a town row, this little place honored three men as heroes today for the part they played yesterday in preventing a wreck of a "Katy" troop train bearing 186 marines to San Diego, whence they sail for China.

Sam Plum, 55, a farmer; E. B. Carlos, night railroad station agent, and Garland Bowman, high school student, are the three.

Plum, inspecting his farm, discovered the track had been washed out and swam raging Little Walnut creek to reach the north end of the washed-out track. He waved down the oncoming train just as Carlos reached the south end of the washout with a flaming fusee. Carlos had been warned of the washout by Bowman, who also swam the swollen creek to give the news to the station agent.

The train was stopped within ten feet of the washout.

BUSINESS CENSUS MADE IN ATLANTA

able immediately for use in estimating the size, growth and possibilities of Atlanta as a distribution center. As soon as tabulated exact information of many different kinds will be supplied.

Census Confidential.

"None of the figures, however, will be given out in such a manner as to indicate facts concerning any one business. This government report to the bureau of the census is strictly confidential. Under no circumstances will information contained in it be divulged. No government bureau will be permitted to consult these figures. They are being collected solely in an effort to make a complete and accurate census of business.

"Census totals will be at once useful in planning business operations since they will be presented in forms worked out with this end in view.

"The demand for all classes of merchandise in Atlanta will be revealed, together with future sales possibilities. The total purchasing power of the city may be definitely calculated and its present division among the different trades will be known.

"The promptness with which these figures are furnished to enumerators will be a large factor in determining the speed of the census work. If business men cooperate government figures upon the business conducted in Atlanta will soon be available."

tertainment last evening, when she was to have played the piano.

Double funeral services will be held at the First Methodist church at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Coroner Jackson said no inquest was necessary.

TIFTON MAN KILLED INSTANTLY.

Cordele, Ga., April 9.—(AP)—H. R. Surett, 24, of Tifton, was instantly killed this morning when the automobile he was driving went into a culvert on the national highway at Wenona, five miles south of here.

Surrett's brother and the latter's wife were severely injured, but a child of the couple escaped unhurt.

ROME MAN FATALLY HURT.

Rome, Ga., April 9.—(AP)—Herschel Rittenhouse, 30, was injured fatally today in an automobile collision three miles from here. Two persons who were riding in the car with him were slightly injured.

Glass from the windshield severely cut Rittenhouse's neck and his death resulted from loss of blood.

TOURIST INJURED AS CAR IS DITCHED.

Kingston, Ga., April 9.—(Special.) Miss Ruth Adams, of Miami, while traveling in a small car near here yesterday, was painfully injured when the small car in which she was travelling was crowded off the road and went into a 20-foot fill, completely wrecking her car.

The hit-and-run car continued its journey and Miss Adams was brought into Kingston by a passing motorist, where she received medical attention.

Her uncle, J. L. Adams, of Rome, was notified and the woman was removed to a Rome hospital for treatment.

Friday night about 8 o'clock a big car turned over on the Rome highway near the Woolley farm, and burned while the four men occupants waited to be picked up by passing cars.

3 SUSPECTS IDENTIFIED AS ROBBERS OF BANK

Joplin, Mo., April 9.—(AP)—Three men arrested here yesterday were identified today as the trio sought by Arkansas authorities in connection with the $6,500 robbery of the Bank of Newton County at Jasper, Ark., March 29.

The three are Tom "Red" McCall, former convict; Frank Parks and Harry Thornton, the latter an Indian of Tulsa, Okla. They are held awaiting arrival of Jasper officers, who yesterday trailed them to Benton, Ark.

All four of the alleged bank bandits now are in custody, Ed Foreman, driver of the bandit car, having surrendered to a posse that overtook the car a short time after the robbery.

RADIO CORPORATION EXPLAINS NEW TUBES

Elmer E. Bucher, general manager of the Radio Corporation of America, when asked for his views regarding the announcement made in one of the New York morning newspapers regarding a new type of tube, said to be capable of operating directly from the lighting socket, made the following statement:

"The research laboratories of the General Electric company and the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company, working in co-operation with the Radio Corporation of America, have been engaged for some time in the development of various types of vacuum tubes in which the current ordinarily supplied by "A" batteries is obtained from the electric light mains through a small stepdown transformer. Research work on this problem is still proceeding and although the laboratories have developed several types of so-called "A. C. tubes," there are a number of practical problems to be solved in the application of such tubes to radio broadcast receivers before the production stage can be reached. Among such problems is the elimination of so-called "A. C. hum" in high quality broadcast receivers where the loudspeakers response goes deep into the base and below 200 cycles.

"The statement in this morning's press, although, I am certain, unintentionally so, is, nevertheless, misleading in some respects. For example, the A. C. tube when available will only eliminate the necessity for an "A" battery. So far as the "B" plate supply or the "B" battery is concerned, it will be necessary, as in the past, to continue to use either a "B" battery or a "B" battery eliminator; nor will the A. C. tube function properly in existing types of broadcast receivers unless the internals of the receiver itself are redesigned. So far as concerns the final result to the human ear, there is no reason to expect a different result from a tube which is energized by alternating current, than is provided by present-day broadcast receivers using standard types of vacuum tubes.

"The Radio Corporation of America is continuing to produce and market its present types of standard tubes and receiving sets, and knows of no reason why anyone should hesitate to purchase any of the standard tubes or receiving sets now on the market.

"Let me be empathetic in the statement that these tubes will not render obsolete radio broadcast receivers employing the present types of vacuum tubes and present methods of securing A. C. operation; of which there are many; neither do they dispense with all batteries. They merely do away with the necessity for an "A" battery."

STANTON POEM TO FEATURE WLS BIRTHDAY PARTY

When WLS, the Sears-Roebuck station, Chicago, broadcasts its third birthday anniversary program next Saturday night, April 16, a southern radio production based on the poem, "Dreaming of Home," by the late Frank L. Stanton, will be the special feature at 9 o'clock. This production is the contribution of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, Atlanta, to the WLS birthday party, and it was written by Marquis M. Smith, radio artist of the Atlanta office.

"Dreaming of Home" was written at least thirty years ago and appears in the Stanton collection, "Songs of the Soil."

The WLS trio, May and June, Ford and Glenn, Chubby Parker and other nationally-known WLS stars will take part in the presentation. George C. Biggar, secretary of the Atlanta foundation, will go to Chicago to supervise the production.

"Dreaming of Home" as a radio feature was first broadcast on WSB January 3, 1926, on the Monday night prior to Frank L. Stanton's death. Since that time several revisions have been made in the manuscript by Mr. Smith, who has attained much popularity in Atlanta for his work in arranging and serving as dramatic reader for special radio productions.

3—No. 850 Hilco choke coils.
2—.006 Hilco condensers.
1—.002 Hilco condenser.
1—.00025 Hilco condenser with grid leak.

In building The Constitution's new five-tube Quality Tone receiver, the following wire steps should be taken in order to complete all the wiring that appears above the baseboard.

Connect "B" to "A" on the first Hilco multiformer.

Connect aerial post of set to plate of first multiformer.

Connect "B" of first multiformer to rotor plates of first Cardwell variable condenser.

Connect grid of first multiformer to grid of first radio frequency tube and then connect this wire to the stator plates of the first Cardwell variable condenser.

Connect plate of first radio frequency tube to one side of the first Hilco choke coil, then conect a .006 Hilco fixed condenser from this point to the plate of the second multiformer.

Connect "B" to "A" on second multiformer.

Connect "B" to rotor plates of second variable condenser.

Connect grid of second multiformer to grid of second radio frequency tube and then conect this wire with the stator plates of the second variable condenser.

Connect the plate of the second radio frequency tube to one side of the choke coil and from that point connect the second .006 Hilco fixed condenser to the plate of the third multiformer.

Connect "B" on the third multiformer to the rotor plates of the third Cardwell variable condenser.

Connect the grid of the third multiformer to the .00025 fixed condenser which should be equipped with a grid leak mounting, running a wire from this point to the stator plates of the third variable condenser.

Connect a .002 Hilco fixed condenser between the "A" minus filament and the plate of the detector tube.

Connect the "A" minus of the detector tube to one side of the 25-ohm rheostat on the panel.

Connect the plate of the detector tube to one side of the third Hilco choke coil, and then connect the other side of this choke coil to post No. 2 on the first Silver-Marshall audio transformer.

Connect the grid of the second audio tube to post 3 on the second Silver-Marshall audio frequency transformer.

This completes the wiring visible above the baseboard. Next week a description of the wiring beneath the baseboard will be given.

RADIO RECEIVER INVENTED TO RUN BY SMALL MOTOR

What bids fair to be a sensation of the coming radio season is a six-tube radio receiver which has no batteries, no eliminators, uses standard radio tubes only, and which gets its power from a powerful and silent little motor driving a small generator. This is an entirely new method of getting radio power.

The outstanding feature of the new receiver is, of course, its freedom from the inconvenience of run down or deteriorating batteries, and the absence of even such attention as must be given battery eliminators. If you come back from a six months' vacation, you find this radio as ready to start up full blast as when you left it, at a turn of the panel switch. Oiling once every year or two is all the attention it needs.

The power of this receiver is very great, as the motor generator unit delivers 150 volts without drop direct to the set. It has excellent tone quality and great distance range, and is highly selective. It is always the same—not influenced by fluctuation in current supply. The amount of current consumed is about the amount necessary for a light to read by—one and a half to two cents an hour.

SECRETARY MELLON TAKES SHIP FOR U. S.

Cherbourg, France, April 9.—(AP)—Secretary Mellon sailed for New York today on the Aquitania.

He reiterated that he had held no conference, official or unofficial, and seen no French financial authorities during his stay in Paris.

2 NOTED ARTISTS ON AIR TONIGHT

A noted vocalist and a celebrated pianist will be heard by the radio audience Sunday evening, April 10, through WEAF and other stations of the red network of the National Broadcasting company, at 8:15 o'clock, central time, for it is announced that Kathryn Meisle, contralto of the Chicago Civic Opera company, and Leonora Cortez, brilliant young Philadelphia pianist, will be the artists of the evening.

Kathryn Meisle occupies a foremost position in the concert and opera world of today and has been referred to as "one of the great contraltos of the present."

The program of the evening with Solon Alberti at the piano as accompanist for Miss Meisle is as follows.

I.—"God Shall Wipe Away All Tears," Sullivan; "Droop Not Young Lover," Haendel; "Homeland Mine," Gretchaninoff; "Les Filles de Cadiz," Delibes—Miss Meisle.

II.—"Barcarolle," Chopin; "Minute Waltz," Chopin-Moszkowski — Miss Cortez.

III.—Aria: "Mon Coeur Souvre a ta Voix"—(My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice) from "Samson et Dalila," Saint-Saens—Miss Meisle.

IV.—"Tango," Albeniz-Godowcky; "Juggleress," Moszkowski; "Military March," Schubert-Tausig—Miss Cortez.

V.—"Where Art Thou Beloved," Gene Bayson; "Song o' the Lass," Samuel Richard Gaines; "The Hour," Solon Alberti; "A Lullaby," William Wentzell; "O, Dry Those Tears," Teresa Del Riego—Miss Meisle.

This program will be broadcast by WEAF, WEEI, WGR, WFI, WRC, WCAE, WTAM, WWJ, WSAI, WGN, KSD, WOC, WCCO, WGY, WHAS, WSM, WSB, WMC.

Marjorie Harcum Returns.

A feature of the program especially arranged for the observance of Palm Sunday by Major Edward Bowes, "daddy" of the popular "family," which will be heard from the Capitol theater on Sunday, April 10, beginning at 7:20 o'clock, eastern standard time (6:20 o'clock, central time) through WEAF and associated stations of the red network of the National Broadcasting company, will be the return of Marjorie Harcum, contralto. Her voice on this occasion will probably be heard for the first time by many radio fans who tune into the stations recently added to the network, taking this Sunday evening program.

Marjorie Harcum, who is a native of Richmond, Va., has been on a vacation for several months. She is one of the early artists to be heard from the Capitol theater and is a great favorite with the radio audience.

An announcement of extraordinary interest to radio fans was recently made to the effect that the audience of a Sunday evening program will be the first to hear the winning composition of the prize organ competition now under way under the direction of the National Association of Organists. The association is sponsoring the competition with a view to encouraging the writing of music for organ and orchestra and to this end several unusual features will attend the award. The Estey Organ company, of Brattleboro, Vt., has volunteered to contribute a cash award of $1,000 to the winner of the competition. As an additional stimulus to the musical aspirants, Major Bowes of the Capitol theater has agreed to have the successful composition given its first performance by the Capitol Grand orchestra and Capitol Grand organ. This will be done in one of the Sunday evening programs.

This program will be broadcast by WEAF, WEEI, WTAG, WRC, WCAE, WWJ, KSD, WHAS, WSB, WSM, WMC.

WHALE BITES ARMY SIGNAL CABLE IN TWO

Seattle, April 9.—(AP)—This is the tale of a whale, or vice versa. The United States cable steamship Dellwood reported that a whale, hungry or curious, had bitten into the army's signal corps Alaska cable last Sunday, thereby severing communication.

Once before, 20 years ago, it is asserted a whale bit into the Seattle-Sitka cable and caused a break. On that occasion the whale became entangled in the wire and was fished up by the repair ship.

THREE CHILDREN DIE IN COLLAPSE OF PLAY-HOUSE

The victims were: Otis Gavin, 4; Edwin Gavin, his brother, 6, and J. W. Kemp, 8.

Effect of Solar Radiation

Sun Spots Winze Atmosphere and Cause Loss of Power in Your Radio Receiver.

BY M. O. MOSTELLER,
Of the Garvin Electric Co.

As air is essential to life, it is also most essential to radio. The electro-magnetic waves produced by the broadcast transmitter are conducted by the air. Here, we bring a most important factor into the story, one which is given little or no mention, but it plays many freaks on radio reception. This is none other than the sun itself, which is nothing else than a great variable star.

It is well known that the sun goes through an eleven year cycle of sun spots. Scients tell us the interior is a molten mass, surrounded by a uniform envelope of heated gases. Rifts or whirling masses of heated gases and volatilized metals appear upon the surface of the sun. Through these circles of whirling masses we see the interior of the sun. These dark spots are called sun spots and can be observed through the more powerful telescopes.

At periodical times the sun gives off 3 per cent more heat than at other times. This happens at the maximum of the sun spot cycle. But strange to say, our planet is no hotter at this maximum because this excess heat causes the water to evaporate, cooling the atmosphere surrounding us. As we know, there exists between the earth and sun a great vacuum space. We also know heat cannot travel through a vacuum. The thermos asserts this fact.

But the sun does send to us light rays. As these light rays strike the atmospheric blanket surrounding the earth they undergo certain changes and the result is the actual heat we feel today. This establishes positive proof that our radio waves undergo certain changes as they travel through the atmosphere. Radio waves and light rays are both electro-magnetic waves. By virtue of this fact they become as members of one and the same family. Radio waves differ in frequency as well as the light rays.

As the solar activity is increased or decreased we feel it only in the resultant weather changes—but how is this action felt in radio? When broadcasting first became active in the year 1920, this solar action was passing, or near its minimum. If we recall those days we remember that a one tube regenerative receiver easily received signals 800 or 1,000 miles distant. This actually happened and was an every day occurrence.

Today the powerful "supers" cannot do this so very easily. Why? We know that today, broadcasting is in a very congested state causing approximately 50 per cent of present interference. The remaining 50 per cent must be accounted for in some way. Today we are nearing the maximum of the sun spot cycle. Atmospheric conditions are rapidly going through many and varied changes. Probably one night your radio receiver works fine and the next night you are able to pick up practically no signals whatever and what you do pick up sound muffled and distorted as though they were penetrating some sort of screen.

In the past two seasons we have often experienced signals coming from one direction to be stronger than another and possibly the very next night will be vice versa. These are only a few of the difficulties experienced during the maximum of the solar change. Again you may ask the question, Why?

Why does this solar change have any effect on radio? As we said before, the rays of light thrown off by the sun are in reality powerful magnetic waves, by sending more of these waves it has a tendency to ionize the atmosphere blanket that surrounds our planet, or, to create a state of high conductivity akin to a short circuit. This action really magnetizes the atmosphere. This high conductivity and magnetic effect really absorbs the radio waves, causing them to travel distances far less than they should go. It weakens signal strength, possibly lessening the quality of reception.

This can also explain why daylight reception is hard to get at great distances; say, for instance, KDKA at Pittsburgh is broadcasting a musical program at 10 p. m. and we can hear it with full volume and clarity at a distance of about 600 miles, but this same station using the same power at 10 a. m. can only be heard at approximately 200 miles. It seems strange indeed, but to explain this—suppose we had a row of powerful magnets representing the ionized atmosphere caused by the powerful electro-magnetic light waves. Now, to represent the radio waves throw past these magnets a handful of iron fillings and we note they will be drawn to the magnets along the row and before the end is reached, practically all the filings will be stopped. This explains why the radio waves are absorbed by the more powerful light rays. In a very short while we are to pass the maximum of this solar activity. As we start downward to the minimum better radio reception will be experienced. This increased and decreased solar activity, as we see, is not only felt in the changes of the weather and in changes of radio reception, but as we face the future, will be felt in many ways, as the spotlight of greater scientific progress illuminates farther and deeper into this great perplexing mystery.

ALL-AMERICAN RADIO GETS BASIC PATENTS

Official announcement has just been released from the New York office of the Radio Corporation of America that the All-American Radio corporation of Chicago has been licensed under the one hundred or more basic patents owned by the Radio Corporation group. This group embraces in addition to the Radio Corporation of America the General Electric company, the American Telephone and Telegraph company, and the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing company.

This announcement coming right after the appointment of the new Federal Radio Commission brings assurance to the millions of radio listeners that the radio industry has at last entered a definite period of stabilization.

Issuance of the license gives All-American access to the more than one hundred basic patents held by the Radio Corporation group, and comes after lengthy negotiations, which were instituted when investigation showed that no high grade receiver could be manufactured without in some way infringing the patents controlled by these concerns.

The effect of licensing All-American and a few other leading receiver manufacturers will be to provide a service hitherto unknown to radio buyers. Heretofore, the independent manufacturer had to devise some means of avoiding flagrant infringement and, necessarily, the cost was passed on to the purchaser as part of the price of the set. The new plan of stabilization not only assures a high standard of design and manufacture, but likewise economical marketing by removing the expensive program of circumvention.

CROSLEY BROADCASTS NOW ON SHORT WAVE

Cincinnati, Ohio, April 9.—WLW, the Crosley radio station at Cincinnati, now is on the air regularly with broadcasts on a 52.02 meter wavelength in addition to its standard wave length of 422.3 meters. All of WLW's programs now are broadcast simultaneously on both frequencies.

The short wave broadcasts were instituted by Powel Crosley, Jr., as an experiment in the development of the high frequency channels, which are pioneer ground in broadcasting.

While optimistic reports of the growth in popularity of cotton-made raiment throughout the country continued to deluge the office of J. Hope Tigner, secretary of the Atlanta Commercial exchange during the past week and convincing evidence that the tendency of wearing apparel vogue was toward cotton, hundreds of girls and women have in Atlanta voluntarily adopted the "make cotton more fashionable" movement, both individually and collectively, and introduced many cotton-made innovations in spring wear.

While no official or organized campaign has been started, the trend towards cotton as materials for garments has swept the entire country. These reports indicate emphatically and give great promise of assisting materially in alleviating the surplus which over-production created, the commercial exchange official declared.

Especially encouraging are reports received following the wide circulation of a cartoon drawn by Lewis Gregg and which first appeared in The Constitution on December 12 under the caption "Where's Yo' Cotton?" This cartoon we forwarded to George Sloan, secretary of the Cotton Textile institute, New York, and was circulated through that office.

Girls Aid Program.

That the ready response of the unofficial movement is not a temporary flare-up which will soon be spent was indicated when the movement spread throughout the country. Only last week the Ceciliana, fashionable dramatic clu of the North Avenue Presbyterian school for girls in Atlanta, blossomed forth in cotton frocks and bonnets, and other groups are following the move.

The trend towards cotton is not chiefly one of economic endeavor, according to Walter Candler, president of the Lullwater Manufacturing company, one of the largest manufacturers of cotton goods for men, women and children, in America.

"Superiority and greater durability of cotton goods has done much towards the movement," Mr. Candler declares. "People are not wearing cotton merely to assist in reducing the so-called surplus. They now take the place of cotton in point of service, durability and general all-around wear.

"The south always has boasted of its beautiful and fashionably dressed women and in ante-bellum days when cotton was almost the only fabric used in clothing, our women's dress was known throughout the world.

Georgians Push Move.

Cooperating in the movement to popularize cotton are William J. Vereen, Moultrie, Ga., former head of the American Cotton Manufacturers' association; Colonel Frederic J. Paxon, of the Davison-Paxon company, Atlanta; Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, president Atlanta Woman's club, and who set a new style among debutantes of New York by wearing a stylish cotton dress, which cost only $2 for materials.

Progress Is Shown.

Other events cited to show the progress of the movement are as follows:

Gimbel Bros.' fashion show during the week of January 10.

Traveling style show of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, January 24, which made a tour of the larger cities.

Bamberger Institute of Fashion and Domestic Arts conducted by L. Bamberger & Co., a department store of Newark, N. J.

Dallas, Texas, style show and cotton carnival, February 20, at the Hotel Baker, under auspices of the Dallas Housewives' league.

Part of the front cover and seven succeeding pages of the mid-winter sale flyer of Montgomery, Ward & Co. devoted to cotton.

A campaign yet to be announced in detail by some 14 of the leading mills and commission houses in the country on pushing the sale of ginghams, principally through attractive designs.

And, finally, the December 25 issue of Liberty Magazine with an article headed "Cotton Frocks for the Silken Woman—Styles for Southern Resorts Show a New Trend."

Another case where a specific step was taken to popularize the use of cotton was cited by Commerce and Finance in the story of the production of "A Kiss for Cinderella," a popular theatrical hit in New York in which costumes as well as back drops were made from cotton sheetings.

Urge Style Show Here.

The Gimbel Brothers fashion show held in January was a pretentious event as many of the most popular debutantes in New York society appeared wearing cotton costumes. Thirty style patterns for women and nine for children were shown at the Gimbel revue.

In a letter to Mr. Tigner the hope was expressed by Mr. Vereen that Colonel Paxon would arrange a "Cotton Style Fashion Show" for the immense new store of the Davison-Paxon company, affiliated with R. H. Macy & Co., at an early date.

Mr. Vereen was highly pleased with the cartoon drawn by Mr. Gregg.

"I think this was a splendid cartoon and I hope that many of our southern papers carry something similar to it. This is real constructive work," he wrote.

Movement Spreads.

The cartoon depicted a cotton producer standing in front of the show window of a southern store in which was a display of Scotch tweeds, English woolens, Irish linens, Japanese silks, imported jute, hemp rope and foreign material wrapping twine. The farmer is shown pointing a finger at these products and asking the pertinent question, "Where is yo cotton?"

Mr. Tigner said the first suggestion that a movement be conducted to popularize cotton was made by Frank Inman, of Atlanta, former president of the American Cotton Shippers association, in an address delivered before this body at the Biltmore hotel. He said the movement since has spread all over the country and that there is real and genuine interest and enthusiasm being shown by manufacturers, department store executives, members of woman's clubs and other organizations in the success of the movement.

TILSON TO PRESIDE FOR JUDGE SIBLEY

An order appointing Federal Judge William J. Tilson, of the middle district of Georgia, to act in place of Federal Judge Samuel H. Sibley, of the northern district, for four months, beginning May 1, was signed Saturday by Judge Sibley.

Judge Sibley plans a vacation tour of Europe, leaving Atlanta during the first part of May, and Judge Tilson will act for him while he is away. Through the fact that federal court is practically suspended until the new fiscal year, which starts July 1, because of lack of funds, Judge Sibley is given the opportunity of getting away from the court grind for several months, and has accordingly arranged his vacation trip to Europe.

NARCOTIC SELLER GETS YEAR'S TERM

John Pruitt was sentenced Saturday morning by Federal Judge Samuel H. Sibley to serve a year and a day in the penitentiary on charges of selling morphine. Pruitt entered a plea of guilty in United States district court.

Frank Kinsey pleaded guilty to possessing a gallon of liquor and was fined $20, having already received a state court fine.

ROXY AND HIS GANG TO BE HEARD MONDAY

"Roxy and His Gang" will be heard henceforth from WJZ and the stations of the National Broadcasting company's Blue Network, WBZ-WBZA, KDKA, KYW and WRC as well as the southern division WSM, WHAS and WSB, one half-hour later than formerly, the new time of broadcasting being 7:30 o'clock, Eastern Standard time.

In the "Roxy and His Gang" broadcast on Monday night, April 11, Gladys Rice will be the featured soloist. Long a popular member of the gang, Miss Rice, whose character songs are a unique feature of Roxy's broadcasting sessions, has acquired great popularity with her radio listeners. Her gift of comedy and her effective singing of ballads combine to make her an artist of unusual attainments. Her popularity "over the air" is evidenced by the large supply of fan mail which is delivered daily at the stage door.

Miss Rice comes by her histrionic gifts naturally. Her father was John C. Rice, one of the greatest of American comedians, and her mother, an equally noted comedienne, Sally Cohen. The older generation will remember Rice and Tom Wise when they starred in "Are You a Mason?" Rice headlined also with May Irwin in "Courted into Court," and took part in the movie, "The Kiss," in which Miss Irwin played opposite him. Sally Cohen's fame was gained on the vaudeville stage.

Miss Rice was brought up in a theatrical atmosphere. After she had been educated in public schools and at Ivy Hall, Bridgeton, N. J., she turned to the theater. In her school days, friends discovered that she had a voice and urged her to take up singing professionally. She had been studying ever since, notwithstanding the fact that she has already achieved success in her character songs and popular ballads.

W. W. Orr, president of the George Muse Clothing company, will be principal speaker Thursday night at the monthly dinner meeting of the Personnel Association of Atlanta at the Peacock cafe at 6 o'clock, it was announced Saturday by George H. Phillips, president of the association. Mr. Orr's subject will be "Human Relations in Business."

Additional features of Thursday's meeting will be election of officers for the coming year and a complete report from present officers concerning the past year's activities of the association.

An attractive entertainment program has been arranged for the dinner, at which plans for the annual picnic will also be formulated.

Quality and Style of Splendid New Cotton Garments Increase Their Popularity in All Sections

The announcement of the increased popularity of cotton wearing apparel in all sections of the country which is shown in recent reports at the Atlanta Commercial Exchange was of great satisfaction to ourselves as well as other producers of cotton garments who have spent time and money in the forward movement, showing the people of the South the merits of cotton garments and getting them to buy and wear more of them.

The Lullwater Manufacturing Company, sponsoring and promoting the movement in this section, is aware and sincere in its efforts to help the South in every phase of endeavor—by improving the cotton situation. To do this, more cotton garments must be bought and worn by the people of the South, and to make this possible the Lullwater Manufacturing Company is doing its big part by making the style and quality of garments which are replacing much wearing apparel of other materials.

Lullwater garments offer style, comfort and wearing qualities in dresses, aprons, shirts, pants for the grown-ups and play suits for the children that cannot be equalled. And the family seeking the most value per dollar of investment on clothing will find that value in Lullwater garments, and, furthermore, assist in the great work of improving the cotton situation which will build a greater prosperity for Georgia and the South.

The Atlanta-Fulton unit is composed of teachers representing schools in East Point, College Park, Atlanta and the Fulton county system.

The annual convention of the state association will be held in Macon April 13-16, and election of officers is scheduled for Friday.

In addition to indorsing Superintendent Wells, resolutions were adopted extending an invitation for the convention to meet in Atlanta in 1928.

Officers of the local unit elected at the meeting Friday afternoon follow: W. G. Scott, president; Robert Lampkin, vice president, and Mrs. R. T. Adderhold, secretary and treasurer.

BURGLAR FOILED BY LOCKED DOOR IN DRUG STORE

A thief who secreted himself in the Carlos Pharmacy, at 35 East Alabama street, Friday night, was barred from looting the establishment by a heavy door leading to the storeroom, and only secured a few cigars for his pains, according to the janitor who opened the store early Saturday morning. The intruder made good his escape by breaking the hinges from a rear door.

Forcing entry some time before dawn Saturday by hammering open front door locks of a grocery store at 207 Linden street, N. E., burglars made way with a quantity of tobacco, stamps, candy and other small articles, according to the report at headquarters by C. Holmes, the proprietor.

Pickpockets took a wallet containing $85 belonging to Louis Boehm, of 85 Luckie street, according to the story reported at police headquarters. Boehm furnished detectives with a description of two youths whom he suspected of taking the wallet when they crowded against him on a Peachtree street car Saturday afternoon. He told detectives that the men were well dressed and one of them wore a short mustache.

J. P. Moore, of 2244 East Boulevard drive, reported the theft of a diamond stud at police headquarters late Saturday afternoon.

66,052 GEORGIA HUNT LICENSES ISSUED IN YEAR

More than 5,150,000 hunting licenses were taken out during the season 1925-26 by sportsmen throughout the United States, including Alaska, and the returns to state treasuries amounted to more than $6,800,000, the biological survey of the federal department of agriculture has announced.

Figures on Georgia revealed that there were 65,862 licensed resident hunters and 190 non-residents who took out licenses to hunt game in this state during the 1925-26 season. The state received from this source $78,825.80, it was stated.

Pennsylvania Girl Wins Prize of $3,000 In Brunswick Contest

The recent contest sponsored by the Brunswick Balke Collender company for the naming of its new musical instrument has decided in favor of the name "Prismatone," with the slogan "The Instrument of Colorful Music," suggested by Miss Mildred Bux, of 1212 Melrose avenue, Melrose park, Pa.

This name and its slogan was chosen from over a million suggestions, for its particular application to the instrument which it names. The prize of $3,000 was awarded to Miss Bux after careful consideration on the part of judges who were chosen from among prominent advertising men and noted musicians.

The second prize of $1,500 was awarded to Mrs. Herman Arky, 2003 Murphy avenue, Nashville, Tenn. Her suggestion was "The Brunswick Philharmonic" and the slogan "Many instruments in one, one instrument in many." There seemed to be but little to choose between the two winning slogans and names, but "Prismatone" received the most votes for first place.

A U. S. coast guard, P. L. Dickerson, Section Base 13, Port Angeles, Washington, was awarded the $500 prize for his suggestion, "The Brunswick Synchromatic," with the slogan, "A new age, a new instrument."

The Brunswick Prismatone is the development of much research on the part of engineers of the Brunswick Balke Collender company, who were striving to create a mechanical instrument which would reproduce the all-important bass and treble tones which before this were reproduced only indifferently on the best available mechanical phonograph. The range of reproduction of the new Prismatone is so comprehensive as to reproduce more faithfully when used in connection with Brunswick "Light Ray" records.

CYCLE OF ROMANCE DEVOTED TO FLOWERS

The Balkite "Cycle of Romance," the broadcasting of which will be heard by fans who tune to WEAF and associated stations of the Red Network of the National Broadcasting company on Wednesday evening, April 13, at 8:30 o'clock, Central time, will be devoted to the theme "Flowers." Flowers have ever been the symbol of romance and the token of love even since the time of primitive man. When the legions of the imperial Caesar subjugated the world, flowers were the garlands of victory. Centuries later when the Christian church sough to commemorate with loveliness and beauty the resurrection of Christ, Easter lilies were placed on the altars of the great cathedrals. Flowers have likewise been the emblem of nations, and the scarlet poppy, so distinctly associated with Flanders fields, has become a great emblem of sacrifice.

This program will be broadcast by WEAF, WJAR, WTAG, WRC, WCAE, WWJ, WSAI, WGN, KSD, WCCO, WGY.

ROTARIANS TO HEAR SIR CHARLES HIGMAN

Sir Charles F. Higman, of London, England, one of the most prominent advertising men of Europe, will address the Atlanta Rotary club Tuesday on the subject of "Your Country and Mine," at the club's regular luncheon meeting at the Capital City club.

Treated for Poison.

Miss Alice Smith, 22, of 92 Mangum street, believed by Grady physicians to have swallowed a number of bichloride of mercury tablets, was given emergency treatment at the hospital Friday afternoon and allowed to return to her home. Call Officers M. D. Cartwright and J. E. Duncan investigated the case.

Marietta Methodist Choir

:: PORTRAYS BEAUTIFUL BIBLICAL DRAMA ::

To Present Sacred Cantata

BY HERB M'CUSKER.

Be they ever so few, those Atlantans who still believe that the Bible can produce as colorful and entertaining dramas as Broadway and Tin Pan Alley, will do well to place a check against next Tuesday's page in their engagement calendar.

To be more precise, those persons who are fortunate enough as to appreciate Biblical picturesqueness, good singing and costumes taken from the Old Testament, if only as a relief from New York's artificial plots, mediocrity of road-show artistry, and abbreviated chorus costumes, will hasten to the nearest ticket office and procure advantageously-located seats for the presentation Tuesday night at St. Paul's Methodist church, Grant street, of "Saul, King of Israel," sacred dramatic cantata, to be given by one of the finest non-professional companies ever formed in Georgia—the First Methodist choir of Marietta, Ga.

Viewed strictly from the layman's angle, it would be a difficult task to find a more beautiful chapter in all the Bible than that which tells of David and Saul—and it is this impressive story with which Tuesday's sacred drama deals.

As to the cast, suffice it to say that the Methodist choir of Marietta is undertaking no new medium of portrayal, for virtually the same personnel first presented "Saul" exactly five years ago, although Tuesday's appearance will be the first in Atlanta. Proceeds will revert to the building fund of St. Paul's church.

David Saves King.

In five acts and nine scenes, King Saul's fall from divine grace is beautifully shown. Saul's court is pictured attempting to console him after he had incurred the displeasure of God. Then the Philistines approach and the shepherd, David, saves the king by slaying Goliath.

Possibly the most impressive scene is that which shows Saul in the haven of the Witch of Endor, to whom he has fled for the purpose of having Samuel raised from the dead. Then follow the death of Saul and the triumphant crowning of David.

The Methodist choir is directed by Mrs. Regina Rambo Benson, who has shown an adept hand at placing the cast at her disposal. Much of the credit for the musical excellence of the presentation goes to Mrs. M. D. Hodges, accompanist, and George Hardeman, orchestra director and first violinist.

The characters are portrayed as follows:

Saul (Bass)—Frank McMillan.
Samuel (Baritone)—F. B. Fuller.
David (Tenor)—F. B. Fuller.
Jonathan (Tenor)—Floyd Earwood.
Michal (Contralto)—Mrs. Glenn Giles.
Abigale (Soprano)—Mrs. Charles Northcutt.
Witch of Endor (Soprano)—Regina Rambo Benson.
Messenger of Comfort (Soprano)—Mrs. George Brown.

Attendants—Frank Lee Hardeman and George Harrison, Jr.

Choruses—Damsels, witches, soldiers.

Seat Sale Opens.

First and Second Sopranos—Mrs. Sam L. Rambo, Mrs. Charles Northcutt, Ruth Webb, Mrs. W. E. Benson, Mrs. George Brown and Mrs. L. L. Welsh.

First, Second Altos—Willie Scott, Ruby Webb, Mrs. Fred Burton, Mrs. Frank Hardeman, Mrs. Glenn Giles.

First, Second Tenors—Charles Northcutt, A. Smith, F. McMillan, F. B. Fuller, Gus McElreath and C. O. Cowan.

First, Second Basses—Frank Hardeman, Fred Burton, George Hairston, Charles McMillan and L. L. Welsh.

The four-piece orchestra comprises: George Hardeman, violinist; Allen Hardeman, cornetist; L. D. Robeson, sousaphone, and Cecil Manning, drum and traps. The musical program embraces duets, solos, trios and men and women's choruses.

Presentation of this sacred drama was originally scheduled for February 15 but was postponed because of the sudden illness of two members of the cast.

Tickets are on sale Monday and Tuesday at the Cable Piano company and the Franklin & Cox company.

WASHINGTON BOOKLET ISSUED BY SOUTHERN

Washington, "the mecca of American patriotism which should be visited by all students of history and lovers of the beautiful in architecture and the fine arts," is described in a handsomely illustrated and beautifully printed booklet which has just been published by the Southern Railway system.

The booklet contains 27 full-page productions of drawings showing public buildings, monuments and other scenes of interest in Washington, each carrying a legend by the chairman of the national commission of fine arts. Vice President R. B. Pegram stated that publication of this booklet is part of an effort by the Southern to draw to Washington more visitors from the south, particularly teachers and college and high school students.

OLSEN PLAYS TUESDAY FOR STROMBERG HOUR

The second of the Stromberg Carlson Hours featuring George Olsen and his Stromberg Carlson orchestra will be broadcasted by WJZ and the stations of the National Broadcasting Company's Blue Network, WBZ-WBZA-KDKA and KWY at 7 o'clock Central Standard time, Tuesday night, April 12. The opening of this series on April 5 marked the first time in the history of broadcasting that a nationally known dance orchestra was heard over the air exclusively under one sponsorship.

The selections which will be heard in the second program will range from dance music to modern versions of classical selections. Throughout the program unique orchestrations and arrangements will be used. George Olsen will feature his well known vocal trio, composed of Fran Fry, Bob Rice and Bob Borger, who will be heard in five vocal numbers. Instrumental novelties will be interspersed among the orchestral selections.

SLAIN CHICAGO GANGSTER BURIED IN SILVER CASKET

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—The body of another gangster, laid to rest with almost regal splendor Friday, today lies in a vault in Mt. Carmel cemetery to await construction of a mausoleum. Vincent Drucci, "The Schemer," shot and killed by a policeman on the eve of the city election Tuesday, was buried in an aluminum and silver casket with flowers estimated to have cost $30,000 surrounding it.

Drucci's funeral yesterday, without benefit of clergy, was held in an undertaking establishment. The Schemer was regarded by his friends as somewhat of a martyr because he died from a policeman's bullet. His friends called it murder, and the coroner still is investigating.

Five Records Fall in Annual Tech Relay Carnival

In the upper right Nesom, of Louisiana State university, is in the act of making his discus hurl that brought a new record. Baskin, of Auburn, is clearing the last of the high hurdles just far enough ahead of the L. S. U. entrant, at the left, to insure him a victory, and at the top right O'Dell, of Clemson, is establishing a new Tech relay pole vault record of 12:6. Cummings, of Virginia, evidently took a deep breath just as he stretched the tape to the breaking point in the center photo, and it was by a margin no larger than that that he outdistanced Hamm of Tech, at the right, in the century. At the bottom left Woodward, Duke university, is shown finishing first in the distance medley relay, while the left solo is Stephenson, of Indiana, winning the mile relay. In the center lower, Coffee, Tech rat, is receiving the stick in the last lap of the half-mile relay. Tech won this event.

Tech Wins Tank Meet At A. A. C.

Yellow Jacket Swimmers Beat Florida Tankmen, 56 to 15.

BY HOWARD EATON.

Tech's tankmen ran true to form Saturday night, defeating the strong Florida tank team 56-15, at the Athletic club. Tech's team of mermen had little trouble in taking first in most of the events.

Florida started off with a bang by taking first place in the 50-yard free style and 100-yard free style but after copping first in these two events had to content itself with a second in the relay and two third places in the fancy diving and 100-yard back stroke.

Bulmer, of Florida, was the outstanding star of the 'Gator squad. He made a fine showing in both the 50 and 100-yard free style events by taking first place in both. Holleman also copped two first places to share scoring honors with Bulmer. Harris, McKinstry, Wardlow and Merry contributed points to the Jacket team. The meet was run off in good order and unusually good time was made.

Dave Young, swimming against time, lowered his former record in the 150-yard backstroke to 1:48 1-10. Young displayed beautiful form and the smoothest and easiest stroke ever displayed in the A. A. C. pool.

Summary.

50-Yard Free Style—Bulmer (F.) first, Simmons (T.) second, McKinstry (T.) third. Time, 26:3.

440-Yard Free Style—Holleman (T.) first, Simpkins (T.) second, Morgan (F.) third. Time, 5:44 2-10.

220-Yard Free Style—Holleman (T.) first, Wardlow (T.) second, Johnson (F.) third. Time, 2:31 8-10.

Driving—Merry (T.) first, Harris (F.) second, Keegel (F.) third.

100-Yard Back Stroke—Fort (T.) first, McCutcheon (T.) second, Sias (F.) third. Time, 1:17 6-10.

200-Yard Breast Stroke—Harris (T.) first, John Young (T.) second, Sias (F.) third. Time, 2:58 2-10.

100-Yard Free Style—Bulmer (F.) first, McKinstry (T.) second, Wardlow (T.) third. Time, 60:8.

200-Yard Relay—Tech first (Bruce, Merrill, Wardlow, McKinstry). Time, 1:48 1-10.

Special trial for record by Young in the 150-yard back stroke: Time, 1:41 2-10. New record.

U. S. B. Nine Continues To Lead Prep League

BY BEN COTHRAN.

MEMBERS of the prep baseball loop busied themselves last week trying to straighten the tangle in the percentage column which resulted from the first week's play.

As a result of the efforts, the end of the second week finds first occupied unanimously by the University Bluebirds, and the cellar by Marist. Tech High and G. M. A. are scowling at each other in second place. Behind them are Fulton and Boys' High, all in a snarl. And after that Commercial and East Point, each with the same percentage.

There have been about as many teams picked to finish first in this local race as there are empty barrels in a brewery. Every one thinks his team will win. Personally, it seems to be between University and Tech High.

Of course, your correspondent can be wrong. That's the easiest thing to do in this era of picking winners. But that's our choice after following the preps for two weeks.

Tech High and U. S. B. cross bats in the feature game of this week's schedule, on Tuesday afternoon at the Bluebird diamond. The Smithies showed good form in beating Boys' High Friday.

"Those kids were playing 50 per cent over their heads," said Owen Pack, Smithie coach. Maybe so, but "those kids" certainly played some good baseball. Their biggest test comes in the Bluebird game Tuesday.

The Bluebirds have a veteran club, and haven't been stopped yet. But "those kids" of Owen Pack's are liable to turn the trick.

Boys' High will more than likely add a couple of wins to its record having games with Commercial and East Point.

The G. M. A. Cadets will encounter two tough foes, Fulton High and University, on Tuesday and Friday, respectively. The Cadets started off by losing to Boys' High and has won two games since then.

Tuesday.

Fulton vs. G. M. A., at Fulton.
East Point vs. Commercial, at East Point.
Boys' High vs. Marist, at Boys' High.
U. S. B. vs. Tech High, at U. S. B.

Friday.

East Point vs. Fulton, at East Point.
G. M. A. vs. U. S. B., at G. M. A.
Boys' High vs. Commercial, at Boys' High.
Tech High vs. Marist, at Tech High.

ALL-STAR FIVE DEFEATS QUINT IN BIRMINGHAM

Birmingham, Ala., April 9.—(Special.)—Completely outclassing the home team, the Atlanta Epworth All Star basketball team defeated the Birmingham Epworth All Stars by the score of 42 to 28 here tonight.

The visitors used a swift, dashing passing attack that had the losers guessing continually, and it accounted for the large number of points scored. Atlanta jumped into the lead at the beginning and held it all the way.

Arthur McHenry was high scorer for the visiting quint, getting a total of 14 points. His work at center was the best seen here in some time, and the whole Atlanta attack was centered around him. Hopkins, Birmingham forward, led in scoring for his team with 10 points.

About 55 Atlanta people, including the team's three sponsors, Miss Alpha Torres, Miss Caroline Hutt and Miss Margaret Larence, accompanied the players to Birmingham. The team will leave here Sunday, arriving in Atlanta Sunday afternoon at 5:30.

Lineup and Summary:

HAWK-EYE-ING SPORTS

·BY · DICK · HAWKINS·

The Sacrifice.

You may be among those who choose football or any other sport for stamina. Try and visualize this word picture: A red-haired youth, slender almost to frailty, leaning against a cold iron fence crying like an infant because he thought he had lost a race which he actually won by six inches in the greatest finish ever seen in a sprint medley. A coach standing on one side with tears in his own eyes trying to convince the lad he had won the race and team mates slapping him on a trembling back, but still that pitiful delirium which follows the nerve spasm of a hard run race. Newman, of Clemson, is the man in the picture, and he won the sprint medley by picking up at least 30 yards on the entire field when he took the baton for the final gruelling 880-yard run.

"I tried the best I could to win—my legs are going to break—the race is not over yet, but I'm still in there—he beat me—he beat me" . . . these words, punctuated by racking sobs that shook the slender form like an ague, poured from the lips of the Clemson athlete, and more than one man turned from the scene forcing back a tear.

Newman won that race on sheer nerve, the potion which goes to make more than 90 per cent of the athlete in any game. Many sophisticated unbelievers are wont to look upon this thing of sacrifice for this or that alma mater as so much fol-de-rol. We wish they could have seen Red Newman after that race Saturday.

The scene was almost pitiful, and yet in it all was a trace of that heroism which marks the efforts of amateur athletes the world over. This was just one case we happened to observe closely—there were scores of others in the southern relays of 1927 just as there are in all field and track meets. Yet the crowd in the stands was but one-tenth as large as the usual football assemblage. Why?

The Crack of the Wit.

Along with such touching scenes as that related above there is a deal of humor to be found in such great athletic events as the southern relays.

Tad Gormerly, coach of Louisiana State university, had a funny one to relate regarding his trip to the meet. He boarded the L. & N. with his athletes and in their equipment were two javelins. The conductor declared that "those things could not be taken on the trains." Tad in turn declared that vaulting poles are listed among the eligibles and that he had always carried vaulting poles to the meet. The conductor perused the list and found vaulting poles enumerated among the allowable items and changed his decree. Yet they say coaches are dumb.

Those Barrons.

Shades of the great Barron family will not keep off Grant field. When the 1927 southern relays started at Tech Saturday afternoon there

Southern League Head Promises Clean Games

MEMPHIS, Tenn., April 9.—(AP)—"Sportsmanship's the thing," President John D. Martin trumpeted late today in his annual salute to Dixie baseball fans and the eight clubs before launching of the Southern association season, which begins Tuesday.

Promising that the "grand old game" will be played "on the level" in the southern circuit, the league executive sounded a note of enthusiasm and confidence in the high quality of sport which will be exhibited on the eight diamonds of the association.

"After a quarter century of existence, the Southern league feels as full of pep as a healthy young man does in the springtime of his twenty-sixth year," President Martin announced in a statement.

"The players of all the teams are eager for contest and conquest. The club owners and managers are likewise keen. They have expended much effort in the attempt to assemble eight winning combinations. In baseball, as in the other affairs of life, all the world loves a winner. A winning team causes the turnstiles to clink merrily; a losing team makes even the pass gate rust.

Fans Are Loyal.

"But it is also noteworthy that southern fans everywhere have been remarkably loyal in supporting honest effort, even when uncrowned with success. They realize that one baseball league cannot produce eight pennant winners in one season. They have a conviction that, after all, sportsmanship's the thing.

"Let us all continue to display it on the playing fields, in the stands, and in all our activities—whether we win, lose or draw. It's a good habit, and cultivates fairness, good-nature and poise.

"I am confident of the continuing and growing interest in the national game. No effort will ever be spared by me in my official capacity to see that the grand old game is played on the levels in the Southern league. To this end I have the cooperation of the worthy sportsmen with whom I am associated in the administration of organized baseball in the south.

"A happy spring and summer to Southern league baseball fans. We shall try to serve you well."

DICKINSON ELECTED BY GAME LEAGUE

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—Jacob M. Dickinson, of Nashville, Tenn., former secretary of war, today was unanimously elected president of the Izaak Walton League of America.

Judge Dickinson is 76 years old and an enthusiastic sport lover. He is now traveling abroad. He has served on the supreme court bench of Tennessee, was counsel for the United States before the Alaskan boundary tribunal and formerly was president of the Walton league's Chicago chapter.

The ticket offered by the nominating committee with Judge Dickinson heading it was elected.

Herbert C. Hoover, secretary of commerce, was chosen honorary president.

The vice presidents chosen include Judge Escar Floyd, Dallas, Texas, and Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, New York.

The new secretary is Fred N. Peet, Chicago, and the treasurer Thornhill Broome, Chicago.

Irvin S. Cobb, Ossining, N. Y., was among the directors elected.

A fight was in prospect on the convention floor when the league met this afternoon to decide where the convention will be held next year.

Strong delegations from Omaha and Detroit are expected to mix. Since the organization of the league Chicago has been its meeting place. Harry C. Goodwin, of New York city, told the body at the morning session that he had kept within his hotel throughout the convention because of what he had read regarding gunmen in action here.

Chicago Gets Bouts.

Chicago will be the scene of two world's championship boxing matches this summer, according to plans of Promoter Jim Mullen. He is arranging titular struggles between Mushy Callahan, junior welter king, and Spug Myers, of Pocatello, Idaho, and Bud Taylor and Tony Canzoneri for the bantam crown. Callahan and Myers probably will meet in June, with Taylor and Canzoneri clashing the following month.

Pole Vault Mark Set By O'Dell

Many Great Athletes Brave Rain in Annual Relay Carnival.

BY WHITNER CARY.

Some 500 athletes from 10 southern colleges and Indiana made a valiant assault on existing records Saturday afternoon at Grant field in the 1927 edition of the southern relay meet. When the final tape had been breasted and the final field event recorded it was found that one mark had been tied, while no less than three had fallen by the wayside. Cumming, the fleet antelope from the University of Virginia, equaled the 100-yard southern collegiate dash mark of 10 seconds; the half-mile relay record of 1:31:8 fell before the relay team from the same school; O'Dell, the Clemson pole vaulter, hoisted his bulky frame over the cross bar at 12:6, nicking two-tenths off his former mark; and Nesom from far-off Louisiana, hurled the discus 135 feet 10¾ inches, bettering the former mark by 3:8¼.

These were the high spots as far as records go in this, the most successful track and field meet ever held in Atlanta. But from a spectacular standpoint there were enough thrills furnished during the three hours that it took to run the 33 events off to satisfy even the most heartless of thrill lovers.

As proof of this it might be mentioned that in at least three of the running events the finish was, to use the parlance of the turf, of the nose variety.

The first of these took place in the running of the half mile college relay in which the first of the marks was broken. Here Cu ming, who but a short time before had accounted for the 100-yard dash by covering the distance in 10 seconds flat, and Hamm, of Georgia Tech, put on a great stretch duel that brought them to the tape but inches apart. So close was the finish that many in the large

TULANE SEEKS SHAUGHNESSY SUCCESSORS

New Orleans, April 9.—(AP)—Negotiations are under way for signing up two men to replace Clark D. Shaughnessy, coach at Tulane for almost 12 years, Dr. Wilbur D. Smith, university director of athletics, announced today.

Meanwhile, the future of Coach Shaughnessy was veiled with mystery. He declined to say where he planned to go, asserting merely that he only wished to free himself of his present contract in order that he might conduct negotiations unhampered.

The names of the two men being considered as his successors also were unrevealed, although it was said that men familiar with the Minnesota brand of football probably would be employed to coach the Tulane team, in order that the Shaughnessy system might be continued.

Dr. Smith said that university authorities had been in touch with several men recommended by Shaughnessy for the place and expressed the belief that the university would obtain two men within the next few days, each of them with more than five years' experience at coaching.

Shaughnessy last year signed a ten-year contract with Tulane with the provision that should he desire within the first two years to sever relations, it would be permitted. At the end of the two years, however, he would have been obligated to remain at Tulane for eight more years.

Both Northwestern university and the University of Indiana are known to have made offers to Shaughnessy within recent months, but the coach says that he has not as yet signed a new contract.

Tech Loses to Auburn, 7 to 5---Georgia Beats Mercer

Tigers Sweep Series With Yellow Jackets

MONTGOMERY, ALA., April 9.—(Special.)—Auburn bludgeons were functioning properly again this afternoon and Tech's Yellow Jackets had to submit to another stinging defeat. The score was 7 to 5.

It was a free hitting melee, with Moulton doing the hurling for Auburn and Carney flinging for Tech. The former was reached for nine safeties while the latter was touched for 11.

At the outset it looked as if it was Tech's day, for the Jackets took the field with plenty of pep and sent across a couple of runs in a hurry, but the Auburnites sat back and listened and did their stuff. The Techsters. knotted the count in their half of the eighth when two runners crossed the pan, but the Moreymen came back in their half and scored a pair for the victory.

Allen Steals Home.

Moulton and Hitchcock led the attack for the Villagers, each garnering a couple of hits in three trips, while Crowley, McCash and Yeoman did the damage for Tech.

Ed Allen's theft of home in the fifth after he had tripled was one of the big features of the game.

It was the seventh victory over southern conference teams for the Auburn aggregation out of eight starts. Their lone defeat came during the Florida series recently. With Tech, one of the strongest bets in the conference, out of the way, the Plainsmen are setting their guns in hopes of landing the 1927 prize, now in possession of the Tech outfit.

BOB JONES BARRED FROM EMORY MEET

Bob Jones, Jr., Emory law student, has been excluded from the elimination contest beginning next week to determine the champion golfer of Emory university, who will meet other colleges in the inter-collegiate golf tournament early in May. Bob's exclusion from the contest was of necessity, since the world's champion is bombarded with duties in attending his classes in Lamar School of Law, at Emory.

The eliminations will take place on the Druid Hills course. Qualifying rounds were played last week and the matches will follow immediately. Among the favorites in this tournament are Chess Lagomarsino, Atlanta; Johnny Wilson, Florida, and Jennings Gordon, of Rome, Ga. Lagomarsino was captain of the Emory team for 1926. Wilson holds that office this year. Gordon is a freshman of whom much is expected. He is at present the southern junior amateur champion.

The teams to be played thus far scheduled are Georgia Tech, Mercer university, Oglethorpe and University of Georgia. The meet is an annual affair played each spring on the Druid Hills course.

Dutch Prepare For Holding Of 9th Olympiad

BY FRANK GETTY.

New York, April 9.—The Dutch Olympic committee has furnished some interesting information regarding the 1928 games.

When the ninth Olympiad was awarded officially to the Netherlands several years ago, there was a deal of talk about the good but economical burghers of Amsterdam declining to finance the games, a proceeding which inevitably entails considerable monetary loss.

Such talk has been silenced by the actual construction of a large and suitable stadium in the southern part of central Amsterdam.

Building in Holland is no simple matter, as the committee's report indicates. For the stadium, which is 285 yards in length and 185 yards in depth, no fewer than 4,500 piles—varying in length from 36 to 48 feet—han to be driven into the soft ground. The surface then had to be raised six feet by means of the addition of 1,000,000 cubic yards of sand.

After this had been done, a report spread that the whole business was sinking into the sea, but the Dutch Olympic committee brands the rumor as false.

The Olympic stadium will seat 20,000 spectators, half of the seats being covered. In the center, there will be a football field of international proportions; i. e., suitable for soccer, as no rugby will be played in 1928.

Around the field will lie a cinder racing track, 436 yards in length and 25 feet wide. Outside this track will be a cycling track of the same width.

Still farther outside, the canny Hollanders are digging a deep ditch, for the purpose, they naively explain, of preventing "umbrellas, etc., from falling on the track." Evidently the Dutch Olympic committee has vividly in mind the actions of French spectators at the eighth Olympiad in Paris.

S. S. A. A. NINES OPEN SEASON ON APRIL 27

With April 23 set as the opening date, and with 13 teams straining at the leash ready to go, the Sunday School Athletic association looks for the biggest baseball year since its organization eight years ago.

One more team will be admitted to membership at the coming meeting Tuesday night on the fourth floor of the Atlanta Athletic club, starting at 7:30. If any team desires to enter and wants to do so before the meeting, it should get in touch with E. I. Coolidge, president of the S. S. A. A. at

As has been the case for the past five years, the S. S. A. A. will be composed of its two stand-bys, the American or "fast" league and National or "slow" league. The American league will have Central Presbyterian, St. Mark's Methodist, West End Baptist, Druid Hills Presbyterian, Grace Methodist, and Gordon Street Presbyterian. The National will have Jackson Hill Baptist, Pryor Street Presbyterian, Capital Avenue Baptist, Stewart Avenue Methodist, Edgewood Baptist, New Antioch Baptist and Woodward Avenue Baptist. Any new team entering will be placed in the "slow" league.

A fast brand of baseball is sure to be played by teams in both leagues. There is a dark horse in each league, with Grace Methodist being the dark horse in the American and Stewart Avenue Baptist in the National. Five new teams are among the leagues, with two, the West End Baptist and Grace Methodist, in the American, and Stewart Avenue Methodist, New Antioch Baptist and Woodward Avenue Baptist in the National.

Sam Glassman will again have charge of the umpires, with Claude Bond and Jerry Allbright back from last year's staff. Bill Burgess and Harvey Weatherly will round out the staff.

The S. S. A. A. has plenty of diamonds, and plans will be laid at the coming meeting for the biggest opening since the first opening eight years ago. The by-laws committee and schedule committee will bring in their reports, and other matters of importance will be gone into and cleared up so that there will be no more routine matters to be considered at the last meeting before the season opens.

All teams must have a representative at this meeting, and all fees not paid at the last meeting must be paid at this meeting before the teams will be permitted to play.

N. G. A. C. Nine Plays 2 Games

Dahlonega, Ga., April 9.—(Special.) With three straights chalked up to their credit, the Bluejacket diamond squad this week journeys over to play the team of Baldwin college, at Carrollton. These two games are expected to be won easily by the locals, and it is very probable that a second-string team will start the contests.

In the attack against the strong Clarksville A. & M. team, State displayed an array of dazzling bat work, the locals accounting for two homers, one triple, three doubles and a number of bingles. Infield work was erratic, but the heavy stick work made up for the lack of proficiency among the inner works.

Absence in the infield of "Goat" Stroupe, last year's captain, is causing trouble at present, but Lifsey, reserve infielder, is holding down the short position very creditably. Stroupe is out at present due to injuries, but he will be back with the squad.

Professor Bramer has discovered a race of people who never lose their tempers, never tell untruths, and who never break their marriage vows. I think it only fair to add that they are uncivilized.

A. & M. Rams Beat G. M. C., 8 to 2

Tifton, Ga., April 9.—The Georgia Military College nine went down in defeat before the heavy hitting of the South Georgia A. and M. Rams here by the score of 8 to 2.

The score was 1-all until the sixth frame, when the Rams came in for a slugfest and scored five runs. Two costly errors made by Rentz's team in this inning helped to bring in the five tallies. The Rams also scored in the seventh and eighth. The G. M. C. boys were unable to hit Drexler, the Ram's submarine pitcher. He held them to four scattered hits and whiffed 10 of their batters.

The features of the game were the fast work of the Ram infield and the hitting of "Lit" Bowen, who made a single, a home run, and a triple on five times at the bat. This was the second defeat handed to the G. M. C. nine by the Rams. They defeated them in a one-sided game Wednesday by a 10-to-1 score.

Benefit Bouts For New York

BY JACK FARRELL.

New York, April 9.—The era of benefit boxing shows again is with us. For the Bronx hospital Dan Skilling has proposed to match Billy Petrolle and Jackie Field, west coast lightweight, to headline a new Garden card on May 13. Antedating this by four days, those gentlemen promoting a Charlie Culkin Kiddie Camp benefit in the same arena, have announced the following card:

Mike McTigue vs. Pat McCarthy.
Monte Munn vs. Pat Lester.
Earl Littleboy Blue vs. Jack DeMave.
Auturo DeKuh vs. Joe Daminges.

These are mostly heavyweights and will be seen in four 10-round bouts.

Hapeville Tossers Beat Moseley Park

Hapeville, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—The strong Hapeville Baptist team won over the Moseley park baseball aggregation, 10-3 here today.

Evans, on the mound for Hapeville, was invincible, yielding only five hits and striking out 17 men. He aided his team at bat with two of Hapeville's 12 hits. Hammett played a good game at first for the winners. Brown looked good for Moseley.

Atlanta U., Morris Brown Game Off

The scheduled game between Morris Brown and Atlanta university Saturday afternoon was rained out and will be played on Monday afternoon, on the Morris Brown campus beginning at 3 o'clock.

Both teams are unusually strong this year, and the game is expected to be a good one from start to finish.

Ruth's Weakness.

Every batter has his weakness and Babe Ruth, the greatest horsehide mauler of all time, is no exception. At least that's the contention of Grover Alexander, star of the St. Louis Cards' pitching staff. The great Alex says: "When pitching to Ruth, keep them from the waist to the knees—the closer to the knees and inside, the better." In the 1926 world series, Ruth did not get a single hit off Alexander.

Babe Ruth Clouts Homer as Team Wins

New York, April 9.—(AP)—Babe Ruth contributed his home run bit to the informal major league baseball inaugural here today and the Yankees nosed out the Brooklyn Robins, 6 to 5.

The Babe's round trip slam in the seventh accounted for three of the Yankee runs, but it remained for Bob Meusel and Tony Lazzeri to clinch the game for the American leaguers in the following frame. A double by the former and a single by the latter turned the trick.

Florida Gators Win Over Havana Team

Gainesville, Fla., April 9.—(AP)—The University of Florida track team conquered the aggregation from the University of Havana here today, 74 to 50 points.

Jose Barrientos, star Cuban dash man, broke the campus record in the 100-yard event, setting up a new mark of 9.9 seconds.

Captain Henry Camp, of the 'Gators, was high scorer, running up a total of 23 points.

Bulldogs Win, 14-12, In Slugfest at Macon

MACON, GA., April 9.—(Special..)—Georgia trampled Mercer here again this afternoon in another gruelling game which brought forth almost any and every kind of baseball. After nine innings of tits for tats Georgia was found leading, 14-12.

The game was similar to Friday's in that both Mercer and Georgia had their eyes on the apple. A total of 26 hits came from two Georgia moundsmen and a like number of Mercer hurlers.

In the first inning Mercer scored three runs, but Georgia tallied two in the second and four in the sixth, leading, 6 to 3. The Bears staged a rally and took the lead by running across four markers in her half of the sixth. Up until this part of the game it was a mound battle, with Newton Stapleton, of Mercer, and "Lefty" Stewart, of Georgia, matching wits.

But, from then on, Georgia scored an additional eight runs and Mercer five.

With Mercer leading at the beginning of the eighth, Frain cut loose for a triple and Keating followed with a homer over right field fence, Georgia taking the lead, 8 to 7.

Mercer failed to score in her half of the eighth and the Georgians drew up for another round of hitting in the ninth. Coach Moseley sent in "Lefty" Purcell, who fared worse than Stapleton, his predecessor. Purcell was touched for only two hits, but received ragged support and Georgia scored six runs. A beautiful double steal in which Chaffin and Arnowich figured, was pulled in the ninth. Chaffin came home and Arnowich went to second.

Rally Nets Five Runs.

A ninth inning rally by Mercer gave the fans at least a short thrill. Stewart went to the showers and Bill White jerked out Waller to calm a rising tide. In the final stanza Mercer tallied five runs.

Starring for the Bears at bat were Lozer, Butts, Bush, Smith, Hammock. Bush, Smith and Stapleton pulled some pretty fielding sunts during the game. For the Bulldogs Frain was the big mainstay at bat with a double and two singles out of four attemtps. Arnowich and Stewart got two hits each. Frain also starred on the field.

Mercer's next games are with Macon's Peaches Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

FAMOUS DOGS ON EXHIBITION AT PUP MATCH

As an added attraction at the Atlanta Kennel club's annual puppy match, to be held Friday evening, April 15, in the Candler garage, Houston and Ivy streets, a number of Atlanta dogs that have been winning blue ribbons all over the country will be on exhibition. These dogs will not compete with the puppies but will be present only for exhibition. Among these dogs will be Idlewood Dreadnaught, an airedale owned by Dr. J. I. Handley and the winner of the recent Birmingham and St. Louis shows. A Boston terrier belonging to J. J. Duncan, a winner at Birmingham and reserve winner at Louisville and St. Louis last week, will be on exhibition. Other Bostons will be Idlewood Kennel's Champion, Idlewood Invader and H. T. Hinton's Jack-O-Jacks. J. C. Dennard will bring two collies, Champion Bellhaven Showmaster and Champion Bellhaven Sweetheart. Wire haired fox terriers will be represented by the Idlewood Kennels' Southboro Santone.

The puppy match is for dogs more than three months and less than twelve months old. It is not necessary for the puppy to be registered or the owner to be a member of the Atlanta Kennel club. Entries may be made at the ring side up to 7:15.

An entire wing of the third floor of the garage has been reserved assuring ample seating capacity and the general public is invited to attend.

There will be no admission charge and silver cups will be given for the best puppy in each of the principle breeds and a cup for the best puppy of any breed.

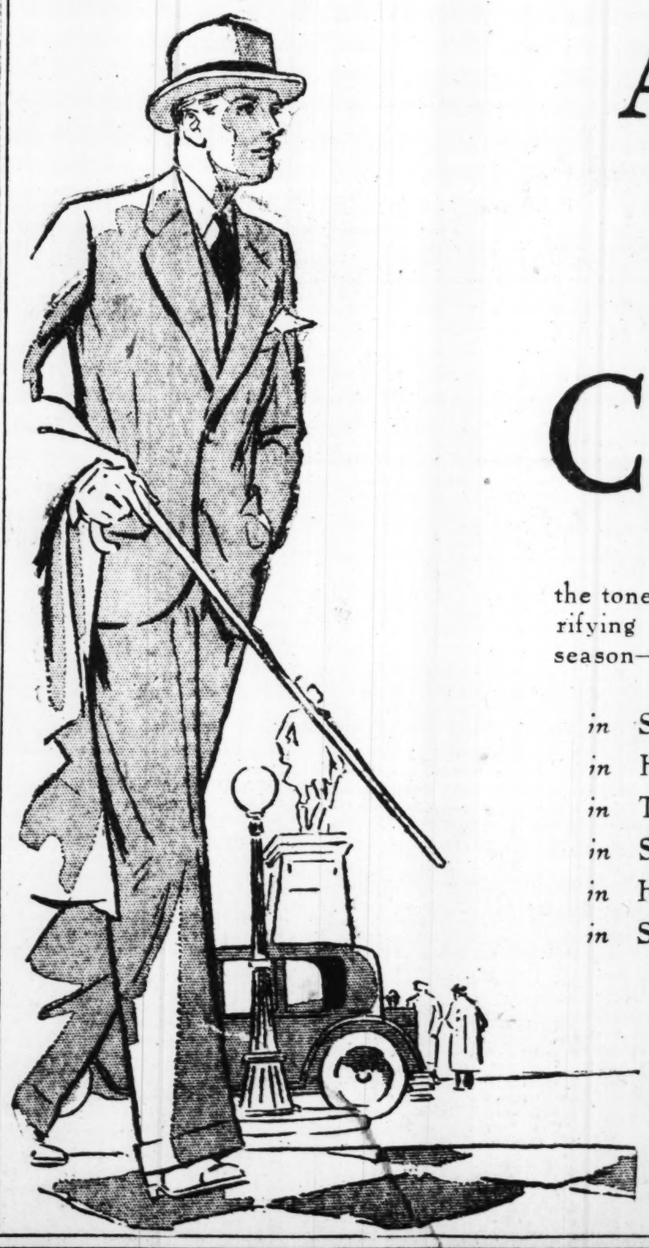

Athletes To Give Up Vacations

State College, Pa., April 9.—Although the annual spring vacation beginning Wednesday noon will mean a week's respite from classes for Penn State students it will not mean a rest for the athletes of the institution. The baseball team will be on a trip through North Carolina and Virginia, playing six games in one week, and candidates for other spring sports teams will remain at State College during the recess in preparation for the opening contests of the season. Track men will be kept busy in training for the Penn relays at Philadelphia April 29 and 30, and the lacrosse and golf teams will keep in trim for the season's openers.

Giant Star Out.

It will be the middle of May before Hugh McQuillan, leading pitcher of the New York Giants, will be in condition to take his turn on the mound. McQuillan broke a bone in his left ankle in a spring exhibition game.

Crackers Halted By Rain

Niehoff's Off Today for Game With Montgomery Club.

BY TOM THOMPSON.

The last exhibition game, scheduled to feature the Crackers and the Albany, N. Y., Eastern league, was rained into nothingness Saturday, and Atlanta fans were deprived of their last opportunity to see the Crackers in action until Chattanooga is encountered in the first 1927 season game here next Thursday.

The wetness wet the ground too thoroughly and parties of both parts decided not to play. Albany continued its trek northward while the Crackers to make the trip to Montgomery divided into two groups, part of which left last night and part of which will embark this morning while most of Atlanta is sleeping.

The Montgomery Lions, cavorting in their beautiful little stadium known among the cillagers as Cramton bowl, will entertain Atlanta's entry in the Southern loop this afternoon. Montgomery being only a comparatively short distance you, a number of the more rabid Cracker fans are expected to make the trip. And, even if some of you misbelieve, the Crackers have developed a following that is rabid to a goodly extent.

Cramton bowl has been given over to an assortment of baseball outfits this season, some of them being big league clubs and some of them high schoolers. But about the most notable thing to leak out of Cramton bowl was a 12-4 defeat handed the Newark Bears by the Lions. If you remember, one of those early starts of the Crackers before they hit that long winning streak was a defeat at the hands of these selfsame Bears.

By this comparison it would seem that the Crackers are scheduled to meet some stiff opposition this afternoon in the antiquated cradle of the Confederacy. The locals were not going strong, in fact, they had hardly started going at all when the Newark Bears humbled them in Spiller's lot. And while this comparison may not be indicative of anything, it may also be indicative of a good game and close.

The opening hurler for the fracas has not been disclosed. Enough are being taken along to furnish plenty hurling, and it looks like Bert is going to give several of his flingers a last little fling against other than home opposition before the season cracks open in Nashville Tuesday. Therefore Pete Fowler, George Johnston, Ruel Love, Tom Rogers and Cliff Markle, all of whom are going on the one-day journey into the land of rest, may find work severally this afternoon.

Advance Agents.

Sort of a forward contingent of the Crackers was forwarded to assure the Montgomerians last night that somebody would be on hand for a baseball game Sunday. Billy Rhiel, who will wear the Cracker uniform in a game for the first time today; Walter Gilbert, Frankie Zoeller, Mule Haas and Umpire Bill Brennan were among the forward contingent.

Those making the trip today will be Johnny Brock, Frank Kohlbecker, Harry Schwab, Manuel Cueto, Frank Welch and the aforementioned hurlers.

Of course, Skipper Bert Niehoff will be in charge of the van.

Excellent Season For Hilltoppers

Waycross, Ga., April 9.—Piedmont Institute found rough sailing when it met the Folkston Independents here, a 9-inning game going into the dark hour to a 9-9 conclusion. Folkston out hit the school boys and was in a fair way for a victory, but the Hilltoppers made everything count for runs in the latter inning, scoring four runs in the eighth and two in the ninth.

After winning two straights from Brewton-Parker Institute, one from Folkston, two from Tifton A. & M., dropping one to Norman Park and splitting the affair with Folkston, things look bright for a good season for the Hilltoppers.

The home of the Crackers—the finest baseball lot in the south, Spiller field. The stands at Spiller's are capable of handling over 15,000 persons. In the left corner is Bert Niehoff, who is preparing to lead his charges to another pennant, and at the right is Rell Jackson Spiller, owner of Spiller field and of the Crackers.

At N. Orleans, Sept. 8-9-10-11.
Doubleheaders are indicated where the dates are repeated as May 30-30.

1. Tom Rogers, right side flinger Tom came to the Crackers after the season had begun last year. The records of 1926 give him credit for winning 14 and losing 12 games.

2. Johnny Brock, on the Atlanta catching staff "for ages." Johnny was on the receiving end in 124 games last year, with a total percentage of .972. His stick registered .285.

3. Walter Gilbert, who will caper at the hot corner this season. In 141 games last year Gilbert nicked the nugget for .305.

4. Manuel Cueto, a performer in the Martin loop since before Mary lost her lamb. The Mobile club, where he played last year, used him at short, second and also in the garden. He is regular shortstop for the Crackers this year.

5. Tillar "Pug" Cavet, a veteran of more pastiming years than Solomon had wives. Pug, however, is not so ancient that he can't still twirl winning ball, as witness his record of 15 wins and eight losses last year. He propels from the port side.

6. Frank Kohlbecker, last year with the Memphis Chicks and this year in the first string receiving berth on the Atlanta outfit.

7. Frank Welch, beginning his first year in the minors since he went up to the Athletics several years ago. He is the wickedest stick worker of the aggregation and covers the right garden in good fashion.

One-Two-Three Finish Expected by Spiller

BY TOM THOMPSON.

ONE-TWO-THREE finish of the Southern association season looming is the goal set by Rell Jackson Spiller for his pastiming hirelings, the Atlanta Crackers.

In the opinion of this correspondent, he is not far wrong, and if he is, then both Mr. Spiller and this correspondent are grossly underrating the strength of other contenders for the same positions. Incidentally, the one-two-three finish referred to is in the first division, reading from the top of the standing list, and not the bottom as the 1926 finish might indicate.

Of course, there is an ancient wisecrack to the effect that the proof of the pudding is in the mastication. Nobody seems even willing to taste of the pudding that the Southern league represents at present. In fact it looks like the first culinary effort of a newly wedded stenographer. Managerial hands have yet to heave their cleavers into rosters in the annual slaughter in many instances.

All of that, however, is considered. Here is how the Crackers stack up.

Look 'Em Over.

1. A catching combination that is the rare achievement of two strong backs and two strong minds in that many men. Its classification is excellent.

2. A flinging quintet that is ancient, honorable and puzzling. The puzzle consists of trying to figure out how they will stand the gaff of a 154-game grind. They can easily be classified as fair, but going beyond that rating is monkey business.

3. An infield that has good possibilities, that can hit and field well, but as a machine remains a question. It should be rated good.

4. An outfield that will trek along with any in the league, that should hit well over .300 and take its chances with a remarkably good average.

Frank Kohlbecker and Johnny Brock are the two catchers. Kohlbecker served the Memphis Chicks last year. He bore the unofficial rating of the best backstop in the league and his stick work falls only a few notches short of the elite .300. Johnny Brock has long been the first string Cracker catcher, and even in face of some serious opposition at one time or another. Both are smart baseball men.

The Hurlers.

Tillar (Pug) Cavet, Tom Rogers, Ray Francis, Ruel Love and Cliff Markle are the hurlers. One might take the Cracker pitching roster at the end of last year, strike out the handles of Jim Bagby and Hollis McLaughlin, and have the same staff back. Between the five of them they managed to win 63 and lose 59 games last season, but part of that record belongs to the time Rogers was with the Lookouts. Anyway, they must be improved to hurl first division baseball consistently and that is just the contingent that is being figured in, for much better performances from Francis, Love, Cavet, Rogers and Markle are expected this year.

Whether the Cracker roster of pitchers remains at five or whether it will be enhanced by another, remains to be seen when Niehoff finally decides what he will do. Bert is against actively participating in baseball this year. But necessity is as great a bearer of discomfort as it is invention and so the season may find the skipper prancing at the keystone. However, that is the only plug in the Cracker infield that is not definitely slapped in tight.

Harry Schwab is at first. Cueto at shortstop and Gilbert at third. Schwab is a splendid fielder, a seasoned ball player and a reliable hitter. Cueto, for all his hoary age, has been doing his stuff in fine fashion this spring. His legs, hinted covertly on more than one occasion as being weaker than otherwise, are apparently still full of springs. His whip is plenty oiled and his accuracy on throws to the initial bag is pretty. Gilbert, stiffened by participation in professional football last fall, is just beginning to get the kinks out. His arm, however, is good and the hot corner is well taken care of.

Double Plays.

The possibility of a good double play combination all depends. Billy Rhiel, who performed at the keystone for Greenville, Sally league champions of 1926, is the boy who will get a chance at the keystone. There is no doubt about Rhiel's hitting ability. He led the Sally with just 11 points less than a round .400. Whether or not he will be fast enough in his fielding to bolster the Cracker infield and make a workable double play combine is to be proven. Rhiel is to be donated the Crackers by the Dodgers. Bert, himself, bothered by a bad leg, is getting a bit too old and a bit too stiff to handle that job the way he once did, but Bert remains the best keystoner the Crackers could get.

In the outfield Zoeller will perform at left. Mule Haas draws the center berth and Frank Welch, with the Athletics in 1926 is in right. Mule batted .299 last year, after getting away to a poor start, and he should boost that by at least a dozen points this year. Welch will paste the nugget for about .325 while Zoeller is figured over the .300 mark.

Cracker Games At Home

The Crackers will play the usual 77 games during the coming season at Spiller's field. They are, in order:

8. Harry Schwab, the portal pillow protector. Harry comes, via the Cincinnati Reds, from the Seattle entry in the Peaceful Front loop. He is rated as an exceptionally capable first-sacker.

9. George "Mule" Haas, probably the most sensational fielder in the minors. Mule's manner of making every ball he handles look like a crip job makes him a high light of any Cracker game. He possesses a fine throwing arm and is a safe hitter.

10. Cliff Markle, right side flinger, is beginning his second year with the Crackers. Like Tom Rogers, Cliff turned in a string of 14 wins and 12 losses last year.

11. Rod Murphy, the eminent utility man. Rod is perhaps the best utility man in the league. He is a capable and safe hitter and finds himself at home in most any infield position. Rod batted .328 in 100 games last year.

12. Billy Rhiel, the hard slugging Sally leaguer from Greenville, by way of the Brooklyn Dodgers. On Rhiel will fall the thorny mantle of filling Bert's job at the keystone.

13. Ruel Love, right-handed pitcher, who is expected to enjoy a much more victorious season this year than last, when he won seven and lost 17 struggles.

14. Ray Francis, the left-handed funny man, who is declared the most capable of the Cracker flinging staff for the coming year. Ray won 13 and lost 10 games last year.

15. Frankie Zoeller, last, and computing his value by his size, least. However, that is incorrect for Frankie is an ultra-valuable left gardener, and as leadoff man in the batting order will doubtless demonstrate the wisdom of placing him so.

Francis Will Hurl In Opener

Many New Faces Appear on Rosters of Southern Clubs.

With a team that is rounded out perfectly and hitting it off in good fashion, the Atlanta Crackers will inaugurate the new charge toward a 1927 pennant in Nashville, come Tuesday.

The acquisition of Billy Rhiel for keystone duties was the lone bother to Bert, aside from a pitching outfit that is uncertain. However, Bert is pinning lots of hope in those soupbone slingers, and at that he is probably right, for Bert knows his twirlers.

Here is the way they will line up in Nashville Tuesday:

Pelican Pilot Set For Pennant Race

New Orleans, April 9.—(Special.)—With visions of another pennant in 1927, Larry Gilbert has just about made up his mind as to how he will start the Pelicans in the opener Tuesday.

Unless injury or an eleventh-hour hunch changes his plans, here's the way the 1926 champs will move off:

Gardner (or Whitney), shortstop.
Mulvey, center field.
Morgan (or Vick), left field.
Blakesley, right field.
Davis, first base.
Deal, third base.
Ewoldt, second base.
Lingle (or Dowie), catcher.
Martina, Scott, Murchison, Osborne, Hodges, Brown or House, pitcher.

It will be seen there are many newcomers among the Pelicans this year, though the team has its share of "letter men."

Ray Gardner, Sam Vick, Jim Blakesley, "Chuck" Deal, Art Ewoldt, Cy Lingle, Bob Dowie, Joe Martina and Jim Scott are too well known to demand formality of an introduction either to Pelican fans or to the Southern league.

"Pinkey" Whitney is a recruit infielder whose peppery work has attracted the attention of all who have seen him.

Emmett Mulvey is the old-time Mobile and Little Rock outfielder, and Mulvey for years has been ranked with the surest fly catchers in the league and one of the mightiest arms in minor circles.

Eddie Morgan is the ex-Tulane football, basketball and baseball star. He is well known to New Orleans fans, but will be a new one for other Southern league fans.

Wilbur Davis is a live wire first baseman and a recent acquisition. He is clownish at times, but looks like a reliable fielder and a dangerous hitter.

Murchison Returns.

Tim Murchison is the big southpaw who was with the Pelicans several years ago for a short time.

"Tiny" Osborne was well known as a Nashville Volunteer; "Hippo" Hodge and Jimmy House both are new members of the pitching staff. Bill Brown finished last season with the Pelicans and looks like a promising young hurler.

"I know we're in for a tough season—that it's going to take a battle right down to the last week of the term to win the pennant," said Larry. "But I think we'll be there. If this team doesn't measure up to the grade, we're going to strengthen it—don't forget that!

"I realize there are a number of teams in the league this year which are going to be much harder to beat than they were last year and we'll have to meet the issue if we find those teams, in their present strength, too much for us."

S. R. O. LOOMS FOR CRACKER OPENER HERE ON THURSDAY

:: Miss Baker Hurls First Ball; Over 3,000 Buy Tickets ::

BY BEN COTHRAN.

SOME two months or so ago, these tobacco-chewing, stocking rolling guys that play baseball came out of winter quarters, began holding convocations in the southernmost part of these United States from Florida to Catalina Island, and the advance guard of the big baseball parade was under way.

Well, the parade has passed, it's getting near 2:30, and the big show is about to start in the main tent.

Atlanta's particular big top will open Thursday when the Crackers cavort about the field while some Chattanooga player stands at the plate and has a strike called on him, as Miss Ellis Baker, of the Forsyth Players, sees how close to the plate she can throw a baseball.

Of course, Mr. Spiller hopes that this fair city of ours wrests the attendance cup from the clutches of New Orleans, the Crescent City by the Mississippi.

But cup or no cup, Mr. Spiller will be glad. And so will Julius Heinemann, down in N'Awleans. And Tom Watkins up in Memphis.

The season of rain checks, umpire razzings, lung busting fans and the accompanying anvil chorus—when the homelings don't win—is here.

However, Mr. Spiller says that Atlanta must have that attendance cup. Mr. Spiller says that Atlanta will have that cup. And Mr. Spiller believes that Atlanta will get that cup.

So, most likely Atlanta will get that cup.

Anyway, over 3,000 fans have already bought tickets.

Mr. Spiller has placed tickets to his prize cup contest on sale at Chess' Place, Rosier Brothers and at the ticket dispensary on Ponce de Leon, sometimes vulgarly called Spiller's field.

The chief attraction in the big top is Ringmaster Bert Niehoff and his trained baseball players, one of the best ensembles in this Southern league.

Mr. Spiller wants Atlanta to get the cup.

And, therefore, Mr. Spiller cordially and fervently invites you to be there.

He'll be waiting for you with a smile. Next Thursday.

Good Polo Match At Fort Mac Today

A great match is promised polo fans on Sunday at Fort McPherson when two picked teams from Atlanta civilians, army officers and members of the Governor's Horse Guard meet on the parade field at 3 o'clock.

The match will be witnessed by a distinguished crowd of polo enthusiasts including General H. O. Williams, the commander of Fort McPherson, and Mrs. Williams; General Charles H. Cox, the adjutant general of the state of Georgia, and Mrs. Cox; Colonel G. F. Baltzell, commanding the twenty-second infantry, and Mrs. Baltzell. Other persons of distinction will be present.

Polo is rapidly coming into its own in Atlanta. Through efforts of the Horse Guard and the twenty-second infantry team small matches are being played from time to time, excellent crowds attending and lending their support to the game and this will all combine to promote the game as the money taken in at the gate is reinvested to buy equipment and more mounts for the players. In fact, to play the game at all costs, each individual members spends quite a sum annually to keep up his end. Mallets are easily broken, clothing worn out, other items run into a sizeable sum. So any support that Atlanta fans give to the game at the Fort will react to their own benefit. They will see better and faster games and excellent teams will be brought here to compete.

As to the match itself, the Rangers and All-Stars contest will afford excellent sport as they are evenly matched or if anything the Rangers have a bit the better of it on paper. The Stars are an untried team combination with outstanding players in each position, but unless they are able to keep playing together the Rangers will defeat them.

The Ranger outfit is one of the best seen on Atlanta fields, although in the last match when they defeated the Freebooters, they looked anything like bearing out this statement in the first three chukkers. When they did get going it was a different story. The teamwork experience gained in the last match should enable them to defeat the Freebooters by something like two goals.

COBB THINKS HE MADE GOOD AS A MANAGER

CONTRARY TO THE BELIEF OF FRANK NAVIN

BY TY COBB,
As Told to
SID KEENER,
(Special Writer, Editors' Feature Service.)

I have no desire to ever become a major league manager again. Mr. Frank Navin, owner of the Detroit club, said I was a failure as a manager. That is his opinion, but I do not believe the vast majority will agree with him.

About my managerial career in Detroit, I have something to say. What manager can become a success who is not thoroughly supported by his owner?

Mr. Navin did not support Ty Cobb as the manager. If he thinks he did, why didn't he purchase the players I recommended? Why didn't he get the players to strengthen our ball club?

And why did Mr. Navin say repeatedly that he did not care about winning a pennant?

If the owner doesn't show any more concern, what chance has the manager?

One season when we were right up in the race Lew Blue, our first baseman, became injured. I urged the immediate purchase of a first baseman. Mr. Navin refused, and I had to play Derrill Pratt, a second baseman, at first base, and use a recruit in Pratt's position.

Was that cooperation from the owner of the ball club?

I will want the vote from the fans on their opinion as to my managerial career before I will admit I was a failure.

While I was in Detroit I never heard of a single player complain about my treatment of them. And I want to take this opportunity to thank all of them for the services they rendered for me.

I was never looking for personal recognition. I wanted to win a pennant for the glory of the players and the city of Detroit. I assure everybody it was not because I did not try that we did not succeed.

Rube Marquard Sold to Orioles

Baltimore, April 9.—(AP)—Rube Marquard, former major league pitcher, has been signed by the Baltimore Internationals, Jack Dunn, manager of the Orioles, announces today and said he plans to use Marquard chiefly in a relief role.

Hornsby Sells Stock at Own Price; Case Is Settled

Many New Names On 1927 Rosters

paign, Lookout president Strang Nicklin swore a great oath and promised himself and the fans that the local club should never limp through another season with a pitching staff as weak as the crew which threw them up last summer.

Straightway he went out and coralled what looked like the makings of a star hurling crew, but today, after a hectic season of holdouts, refusals to report and discouraging training camp trials, the Lookout pitching staff just three days before opening day looks little stronger than it did this time last spring.

Spaulding, a star right-hander bought from the Eastern league, refused to come south; Bryson, ace of the Montgomery staff of the Southeastern league, bought during the winter, decided to go back to his trade of teaching school and only one of the promising bunch of recruits is left as the Lookouts prepare to open with the Barons here Tuesday.

Manager Jimmy Johnston probably will carry eight pitchers into the season and the eight will be: Johnny Horan, who led the local staff last summer; Red Bates, who finished just one game behind Horan; Rube McKenty, portsider who was handicapped by poor health last year but who looks good for 1927; Louis McEvoy, the young right-hander who just failed to make the grade with the Senators this spring; Hank Thormahlen, bought from Bridgeport of the Eastern league, where he won 19 games last summer; Howie Conklin, a young submariner from semipro ball who has looked great in exhibition games; Babe Phelps, who won 15 for High Point in the Piedmont in 1926, and either Bill Cook, right-hander from Mississippi semipro, or Fred Coumbe, the old-timer who may be changed back into a pitcher from a first-sacker.

Few Dependable.

In the entire list there is little really dependable mound talent except in the person of Johnny Horan and Hank Thormahlen, who look today like they are due to wade through to impressive finishes.

Now here's a paradox that sounds peculiar but works out with a little reasoning: The Lookouts traded the slugging Babe Bigelow to the Barons and sold Bruce Hartford, thereby losing the services of one hitter who clouted for a gay tune of .370 and another who accumulated enough base knocks for an average of .305, yet this summer the Lookout average should be as good, maybe a little better, than last year.

The improvement which is considered enough to make up the deficit comes in heavier hitting throughout the infield though the outfield without Bigelow is certain to drop in the eslap averages.

Plenty Infielders.

Seven infielders are on hand today and if eight pitchers are to be retained through Tuesday two of the seven must be sliced off. In the infield which will be carried into the season there will be three, probably four, .300 hitters—a remarkable improvement over the weak hitting inner circle last year. There is Manager Jimmy Johnston, who hit well over the coveted limit year after year in the National league. He should be a big improvement in hitting at second base over Krehmeyer, who could average but .232.

Johnny Chapman, at third this summer, will come over the dividing line and his long left field hitting should be useful in the local park. Johnny hit .308 for the Barons last summer. Bob Hipps, at first for the Lookouts last year, was well up in the first class with .340 and should hit as much or more this summer. Thorp Hamilton at third last year hit only .267 and if he should do no better this summer at short the grand average for the infield will still be over the round figure.

Tony De Fate, bought during the winter from the Witchita Falls club of the Texas, may be retained over Hamilton but it is likely that Tony will be sent back before his purchase money is due.

Same Receivers.

Behind the bat the Lookouts are as strong as last year and also stack up with the best in the league. Don Anderson, the dependable wheelhorse who was up with the leaders with a bat mark of .342, and Glenn Turner, the peppery youngster who hit .295, will divide the burden.

Dick Tangeman, bought from Knoxville of the Sally, where he hit .341 last summer, will take Bigelow's place in the outfield trio, but will be shifted over to the middle court with Dixie Carroll in left and Eddie Lewis in right. The outfield, if Tangeman hits within 50 points of Bigelow's total, will still bat near .350 as an average.

Little Rock After First Four Place

Little Rock, Ark., April 9.—A thoroughly reorganized Little Rock team will go into the Southern association race Tuesday in an effort to hoist Little Rock from its four-year abode at the bottom of the league. And that is the purpose of President R. G. Allen and Manager Joe Cantillon—they won't promise Little Rock a pennant winner, but are laying definite plans to give the local fans a winning ball club.

All of the arrangements for taking a more active part in the contest this year haven't been completed and changes are forecast right up to the opening day with a promise that other changes will follow if the club doesn't get away as it should.

Considerable dependence is to be placed on the pitchers and catchers and the boast is made here that no club in the league has a better outlook as to battery men. Eddie Ainsmith, veteran behind the bat, and Gus Redmon, obtained from the Pacific coast, have the experience and the class to fill all the requirements. Both have been here throughout the training season, both are in condition and both are eager to work. It looks like a case of two first-string catchers for the Travelers this year. Both are excellent receivers, both have good arms and both can hit the ball.

The Little Rock club will count heavily upon veteran pitching with a quartet of real veterans in "Rube" Robinson, the everlasting southpaw; Ray Caldwell, George Dumont and Dan Tipple. Dumont, former Cracker, was obtained from Minneapolis and Tipple returns to organized baseball after a fling in the independents. Then there is Martin Baylin, who pitched fine ball for the club last year, and Nelson Potts, a husky southpaw, shows lots of promise. Potts still is a young man although a veteran in baseball experience. Eddie McBee, the Indian southpaw, looks more like a winner this year—one or two of the youngsters look quite hopeful. Cantillon expects to get a staff of six pitchers out of this list that can be depended upon.

Hawk Needed.

The club still is looking for a real ball hawk and a right-handed hitter to play center field, but the other two outfield posts are well filled. Tom Gulley, who came within one point of winning the batting honors in 1924, has returned to the club after a year with the Chicago White Sox and the Shreveport club of the Texas league. Tom has gotten himelf into excellent condition this spring and with a troublesome appendix out of the way believes that he will have a great year and hopes to gain the honors that might have been his two years ago if he hadn't been forced to finish the season in a hospital. For left field the Little Rock club has obtained "Red" Ostergard, of the championship New Orleans lineup of last season. "Red" declares himself delighted with the transfer to the Travelers, although it means moving from the top to the bottom. "Red" promises to help get the Travelers off the bottom.

The situation on the infield was considerably improved Tuesday when the local club signed Ray Grimes and Royce Washburn, two players who came here as free agents. Both are veterans at the game and both are rated as heavy hitters. Grimes is to play first base and is expected to fill the vacancy left by "Bud" Clancy. Al Niehaus was bought from the Crackers to take "Bud's" place, but became such a stubborn holdout that the local club turned him back to Atlanta and signed Grimes. Washburn also has played considerable ball at first base, but he is a versatile sort and does well at second base or in the outfield.

Blair on Keystone.

So far this spring Clarence "Rabbitt" Blair, with the team late last season, hasn't had any opposition at second base and has done well. He is rated as an exceptionally promising young infielder and is assured of a real chance, although Washburn may also be tried at second base. If Washburn gets the regular place, Blair is to be retained for utility duty, while if Blair remains at second Washburn will fill in wherever a good man is needed.

Third base is the undisputed property of Walter Standquist at this time. This peppery youngster was obtained from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., on the advice of some well-known judges of ball players, and he has lived up to expectations in the spring work.

Shortstop is a position yet to be filled, although two candidates are in the field, "Chick" Cagnon, more or less a veteran, and Jim Battle, a youngster sent here under option by the White Sox. Battle split a finger soon after his arrival and hasn't had a chance to show.

With this lineup and the addition of an acceptable center fielder and a dependable shortstop the Travelers should have little difficulty in remaining off the bottom this year and should bid for a place among the first four.

Baron Officials Keen About Club

Birmingham, Ala., April 9.—(Special).—Johnny Dobbs, in his third campaign as manager of the Barons is probably as well prepared to send a club to the wire Tuesday as any pilot in the league, although Johnny himself is putting out nothing in the way of championship talk.

A big cut—the first of any importance—in the roster last week whittled the Baronial fold close to the legal 18 players. Dobbs has yet to chop off two or three before getting within the law, but his decision will hardly be made until the last moment, since there is little to choose between what must be kept and what must be let go of the surplus.

Lacks Gardeners.

As it stands, Dobbs will keep only three outfielders, and retain eight pitchers. This situation is brought about by the plentitude of hurling talent of known calibre and, partly, by the dearth of capable gardening prospects. Three outfielders, four infielders, eight pitchers, two catchers and an utility player would round out the 18. These may be as follows:

Outfielders, Bigelow, Barnes and Ganzel.

Infielders, Jourdan, first base; Schepner, second base; Gillis, shortstop; Baird, third base.

Catchers, Yaryan, Cooper.

Pitchers, (eight)—Cunningham, Evans, Morrell, Loftus, Palmero, Doss, Mitchell, Van Alstyne, Judd, as a selection.

Utility, one from Rosenfeld, Kloza.

The foregoing grouping places Schepner at second base, although Rosenfeld has played it all through the exhibition season. Rosie is doped to have the edge over Kloza for utility work, as he is a versatile player.

By way of summary, Dobbs' pitching is certainly the best in years from on paper. Morrell, Loftus and Van Alstyne, former Eastern leaguers obtained through Washington, appear likely to be winners in the Southern, particularly Morrell, whose fast ball has been zipping past batters all spring. Monroe Mitchell has about convinced Dobbs that he has regained all the cunning that was his in 1924 when the Baron skipper took him to Memphis fresh from the campus of Mississippi A. and M. and used him effectively in winning a pennant.

Palmero Cinch.

Palmero will do the southpawing last summer should indicate that the Barons will have the best lefthander in the league. Bill Evans and George Cunningham, both holdovers, are counted on to stock, with the eighth place between Paul Doss, rookie southpaw, and Ralph Judd, who passed the first half of the summer here. Judd can play the outfield, in addition to pitch relief ball, and through the dual ability should have an edge on Doss.

The addition of Elliott Bigelow, who average .359 at bat during two years at Chattanooga, gives the Barons two dangerous hitters for outfield duty, Babe Ganzel being the other. Babe hit 342 last year. Red Barnes, former Alabama football and baseball star, is counted on to stick it out in center.

Pete Cooper, considered ripe after two years in the Sally league, will share the catching burden with Yaryan. He has been hitting around .450 in spring contests, and his addition should give the Barons the hardest hitting catching department.

The infield is entirely holdover, with Schepner's form at second to decide largely whether or not the yawning hole that existed around the keystone last year is to be closed.

Chickasaws' Garden And Mound Weak

Memphis, Tenn., April 9.—An infield that looms as strong if not stronger than the one that finished last season, and an unsettled pitching staff and outfield weaker than the pitching and outfield of 1926 is the status of the Chickasaws on the eve of the opening of the season. There may be developments before the season starts Tuesday that will considerably brighten the pitching and outfield but those departments of the Chicks look discouraging.

Clyde Milan starting his third year as manager of the Chicks stated today that he was satisfied with the infield and catching which he believes is stronger than last season but admitted he was not pleased with his pitchers and outfielders.

Turner Barber, centerfielder of last season, is still holding out. If he signs up in time to start the season it will relieve the situation. At present the outfield is composed of Dan Taylor, secured from Washington, George Ferrell and Storey Williams, youngsters here awhile last season and Elwood "Mike" Smith, star with William and Mary college last season turned over to the tribe by the Giants and who reported Friday.

Clarence Griffin, diminutive lefthander who won over twenty games for the tribe last season and who was sold to Brooklyn optionally is expected to be returned but has not been yet. Benson Brillheart left-hander purchased by the Cubs, may be back but that is undecided.

Of the 15 pitchers on the roster now, it is practically a certainty that the seven to be retained will be, Guy Morton, Dick Bonnelly, Lefty Brown, and Roy Spruell here last season, Alfred Wheeler, here back in 1916 and last year with Wichita Falls, Lem Owen, secured from Hartford and Harry Kelly, last season with Birmingham. Brown is the only lefthander.

Jenkins Signs.

The signing of Johnny Jenkins, shortstop of 1926 who was a holdout until Thursday, gives added strength to the infield with Milan having two shortstops to choose from.

The other is Charlie Engle, secured from the Athletics and formerly with Greensboro. He is a great fielder, but does not look impressive at bat. Engle however, will start the season because he is in better shape than Jenkins.

Ray Schmandt will be back at first and Joe Klugman at second. Jerry Standeart, who batted .345 for Brooklyn in sixty games last season has replaced Bobby Barrett at third and in the exhibitions looks like an improvement over Barrett, with Standeart, Klugman and Schmandt, all who hit over .300 last season and Jenkins, a formidable hitter, the tribe would have a strong offensive and defensive inner works.

Ray McKee, veteran secured from Baltimore and who has served considerable time in the majors has replaced Frank Kohlbecker, sold to Atlanta as first string catcher. McKee a left-handed hitter, has batted well in the exhibitions. Ed Cousineau, left over from last season will be McKee's assistant.

If Barber signs up and the Chicks get Griffin and Brillheart back things will look more encouraging, but until they do the Chicks look weak in the outfield, and pitching. Probable opening batting order.

Alten May Hurl Against Crackers

Nashville, April 9.— (Special).—Jimmy Hamilton's Vols are better prepared for the springing of the Southern Association barrier this year than has been true since he took the management in 1923.

As a matter of fact, the Vols are some 25 to 40 per cent stronger than they were at this time last year, and for a simple reason. This spring Hamilton wasn't compelled to take the hand-me-downs from the major league teams. For last December the Nashville management told him to go out and buy some talent—and he did. Hence the strengthening.

However, shortstop position is causing Hamilton some concern. He will have a new man in the near-works by the time the Crackers square off here in the opener Tuesday. Two men are available, he says—one from the majors and one from the American association. He had banked on obtaining Buck Redfern from the Tigers but was out of luck when George Moriarity turned the former Vol over to Fort Worth.

Then there is a doubt about the outfield. Red Smith and Poco Taitt have their positions cinched, of course. Duffy Lewis will start off in the third garden but his chances of completing the season are somewhat slim.

But the pitching staff is a hot number and no foolin'. Three southpaws, Ernie Alten, Oscar Fuhr, and George Gilbert look good. Of the port-siders there are William Gould. George Kirsch, Fred Johnson, and Norman Glaser. Bill Harris and Earl Howard will be around for at least ten days after the opener. Both have been ill recently.

Earl Alten will face the Crackers Tuesday. Incidentally he will have the honor of opening the Vol's new park—one of the minors.

Only one 1926 player is on deck. That is Polly McLarry on first. Bill Black, of Minneapolis, has replaced Jay Partridge at second.

Red Torphy may open at short, although he's listed as utility. Gink Fowler, another former Minneapolis player, will start at third. Leo Mackey will be first string receiver with Ray Eaworth as relief.

Here's the way they'll probably start Tuesday:

Torphy, ss;
Black, 2b;
Smith, rf;
McLarry, 1b;
Fowler, 3b;
Lewis, lf;
Taitt, cf;
Mackey, c;
Alten, p. (or Fuhr).

PETRELS LOSE TO INFANTRY NINE, 8 TO 4

Columbus, Ga., April 9.—(AP)—By winning today's ball game, 8 to 4, the Infantry baseball team broke even with the Oglethorpe Petrels in their two-game series. Smythe, for the Infantry, was the star of the game, he having scored four runs, walked four times, hit one double, stole five bases and had five putouts. "Home Run" Shepherd, left fielder for the visitors, lived up to his Friday's performance in hitting homers, he having made one during the first inning.

Score by innings:	R.	H.	E.
Oglethorpe ...200 000 200	4	6	2
Infantry 220 202 00x	8	7	1

was a feeling of distinct regret that no Barron would figure in the returns. And no Barron did until the runners of Monroe A. and M., coached by Red Barron, took first place in the prep relay event for schools of that class. You can't keep a Barron from figuring in all the athletic events at Tech.

Pretty Young Thing.

It is entirely fortunate that athletes cannot hear the remarks that emanate from the grandstand. If they could there would probably be much assault, considerable mayhem and no little murder committed. Near us at one time during the afternoon was a pretty young thing who attended the track meet to see her prep school hero win something between the pole vault and the sprint medley. She didn't care which. But she was a very interested spectator and showed her keen interest by asking her companion in all earnestness why one of the hurdlers hit those things with his feet—he might get hurt. She also wanted to know why all those fellows in the relays carried clubs in one hand.

More About Heroism.

Eubanks, curly-haired youth from Oglethorpe who tied with East of L. S. U. in the high jump event displayed a deal of sportsmanship following the event Saturday. He was talking to several of his teammates who questioned him about the results of the jump. "Well," said Eubanks, "we tied at 5 feet and 11 inches and I won the toss for first place. It's a darned shame, too. East is a better jumper than I am." Such a remark when he was talking to a few friends and not for "the camera," is the mark of a true sportsman.

Knows His Relays.

The way in which the huge field of events was run off is a great credit to Coach Alexander of Tech and the young army of men who helped him engineer the mammoth meet. And that statement will hardly repay the gentlemen in question for the frazzled nerves resulting from the 1927 relays.

GOLF STRATEGIES THAT WON

Leo Diegel Describes Unexpected Tactics That Helped Down Walter Hagen and Kirkwood

BY BUNKER.

It was Hagen and Kirkwood against Sarazen and Diegel, and "The Hage" was combining with the great Australian trick-shot artist to make a runaway match of it.

The scene was Hollywood, Fla., the time midwinter of the 1924-25 season. The occasion was a best ball foursome of the Florida Golf league. Sarazen and Diegel had been showing their heels to all their rivals and the gaily garbed gallery, seeing them trailing thus sadly, couldn't understand it at all.

Then, quite suddenly, the struggle assumed an entirely different aspect. Gene and Leo streaked brilliantly forward with a series of plays that brought them abreast of Walter and Joe.

What had caused this sudden reversal?

This was the question I put to Leo Diegel.

"Well, it's this way," he relied. "In many a golf match the result is determined long before the finish, even when it is necessary to play to the final green to find it out.

"You might call it the turning point, if you wish. But somewhere along the line one of the contestants knows the odds to be faced are too great, or else that victory is possible. One play alone may alter the entire psychology of the situation.

"Take this match with Hagen and Kirkwood.

Were Two Down.

"We had played only four holes when it seemed as if Gene and I would be completely snowed under. Coming to the fifth tee we were two down.

"Now, if Walter and Joe won the next hole, putting us three down, they would have an edge that we would have a terrible time overcoming.

"At the start of play on the fifth hole, which measures 400 yards, we played worse golf than we had shown on the previous holes.

"Hagen hit a whale of a tee shot. Sarazen and Kirkwood drove far behind him. As for me, I pushed my ball away off to the right, behind a big tree.

"To make matters worse, Sarazen hooked his second at a time when it appeared that it would be up to him to hold our opponents even. His ball went into rough off to the left of the green, so that only a miracle would permit him to get par four.

"Hagen and Kirkwood each made the green in two, 20 feet from the cup.

"Well, my ball lay a full 220 yards from the flag, and after I had looked over the tree that stymied me I realized there was no possible chance for me to play my second within speaking distance of the green. The tree was tall and wide, with branches that swept the ground. I could neither hook nor slice around it, nor shoot over or under. To play into the fairway to its left would net almost no distance.

Noticed Low Shed.

"At this point I took note of a low shed extending a bit beyond the tree and 15 yards to the right. Perhaps it was because I was playing with a trick-shot artist like Joe Kirkwood. Anyhow, the thought came to me that if I could shoot my ball off the side of that shed I might be able to billiard it past the tree and get into a good position well up the fairway.

"It was my only chance and I took it. Using an iron, I played a low shot that glanced off the wall perfectly and came back to the fairway.

"My ball was still 125 yards from the flag, but I was filled with confidence after my successful billiarding. Using a full mashie I laid my ball stone dead to the cup. In fact, I nearly holed it. It grazed the cup as it passed to stop 2 feet beyond.

Holed His Ball.

"Hagen and Kirkwood were each down in four and I holed my short one for a half. Gene took a five.

"It was wonderfully heartening not to have lost that hole. Instead of being three down we were only two down. Filled with new pep, we sailed in and won two of the next three holes with a birdie and an eagle, halving the other one. That squared the match. After that there was no stopping us. We finally won out, 5 and 4. Making the proper play at a crucial moment was largely responsible."

Drastic Changes Made In Basketball Rules

New York, April 9.—(AP)—The joint basketball rules committee, in annual session here today, made a drastic change in the amateur rules by restricting the dribble to a single bound. The number of bounds heretofore had been unlimited.

Another important change provides that "time out" shall be taken on all fouls. This will add from three to five minutes to the actual playing time of the average game. Heretofore time out has been taken only on technical fouls and on personal fouls which called for two or more free throws. Under a third change the referee is forbidden to blow the whistle on jump balls except at the beginning of periods and after time out. Previously the whistle has been sounded after each basket and, by some referees, on shots from out of bounds, adding to the bedlam of a hot game.

Officials of the committee said the change was adopted "to eliminate roughness and to encourage team play."

"Seventy per cent of fouls and violations of the rules have resulted from the dribble," said Oswald Tower, Andover, Mass., editor of the official guide, in making the announcement. Observing that basketball "is essentially a team game," he said restriction of the dribble would reduce the element of individual play and encourage passing.

The change was adopted unanimously by the committee after three hours of discussion. It goes into effect with the new season and applies to all amateur teams.

Represented on the committee are the National Collegiate Athletic association, the Y. M. C. A. and the A. A. U. Two representatives of the chartered boards of basketball officials also attended the session.

L. W. St. John, director of physical education at Ohio State university, was elected chairman of the committee. A. E. Metzdorf, Rochester, treasurer; George T. Hepbron, New York, secretary, and Mr. Tower, editor of the guide, were reelected.

Five Marks Fall In Tech Relays

crowd present had to wait for the official announcement before learning the winner.

Heartbreaking Finish.

Another heartbreaking finish took place in the two-mile relay for colleges which went to Georgia by the proverbial whisker. This race looked to belong to the strong Indiana team until the last 50 feet. At this point Yance, the anchor man for the Red and Black, put on a wonderful spurt and in the closing strides was up to get the verdict.

But it was left for the closing moments of the meet to bring forth the biggest thrill of the entire afternoon. This took place when Newman, of Clemson, and holder of the half mile conference record, made up at least 40 yards in the final half mile of the sprint medley event to gain the decision by the smallest margin of the afternoon. It was a fitting climax to an afternoon of wonderful endeavor.

While most of the interest centered in the sprint and distance races, the field events were getting a full share of attention by the assembled athletes as proved by the fact that of the three records that crumbled during the meet two were in this department.

The first mark to totter from its pedestal was the pole vault figures of 12:4 made by O'Dell, another star athlete from Clemson. O'Dell was in good form and skimmed over the bar at 12:6. He might have done better had he been pushed, but as his nearest rival was not in striking distance he called it an afternoon at the above mentioned notch.

A short time after O'Dell had bettered his former mark, the discus throw medal and a new record of 135:10 started on a long trip to Louisiana as a result of the efforts of a hefty looking individual by the name of Neson from the state college of that locality.

Tech Wins.

The running broad jump brought the only first place to Tech when Hamm cleared 22:7 1-2 feet. This was short of his relay meet record of 24:2 but was well out beyond his nearest competitor. The soft nature of the ground probably accounted for no better marks in this event.

As rain had made a rather lengthy visit during the preceding night and had staged a slight encore during the morning hours the turf and cinder path had been left in a rather slippery and spongy state. In fact one could not go far wrong by saying that the condition of the track took at least two seconds off the quarter mile time and others in the same proportion.

The following are the complete results of all the events:

Two student managers also will accompany the players, James Forgie and Frank Gager.

'Rajah' Realizes Big Profit on His Trade

BY WESTBROOK PEGLER.

(By Leased Wire.)

NEW YORK, April 9.—Just in time to begin the season on terms of sweet peace and sportsmanship with his superiors, Rogers Hornsby today sold his 1,167 shares of stock in the St. Louis Cardinals back to his favorite enemy, Sam Breadon, president of the firm. He got $100,000 for himself and $12,000 more to pay his lawyer, the exasperating William J. Fahey, of St. Louis who made himself so obnoxious to the National league proprietors at their meeting in Pittsburgh Friday by refusing to consider the best interests of the national game. This was $12,000 more than the highest offer submitted at the Pittsburgh meeting and a fair profit for one more night's hesitancy. Furthermore, the time of the compromise was gauged with excellent judgment for the dispute brought Hornsby all through the training season and right up to the opening of the regular season far ahead of Babe Ruth in the important matter of exploitation only to be called off before it could involve the National league in distasteful court proceedings.

Leo J. Bondy, counsel for the New York Giants, who had threatened to ask for a writ of injunction on Monday to restrain John Heydler, president of the National league, from ordering Hornsby out of play, announced that he had torn up the draft of his petition. Heydler announced that there had been a general wooing and an all-around compromise. Hornsby announced that he had received his original asking price of $105 a share, or $122,535, but word later came from an authority in the matter than whom there is no better that this was shaved $10,535.

Big Mystery.

All concerned made some mystery of the meeting, but Hornsby, Fahey, Heydler and Bondy returned from Pittsburg on the same train, arriving Saturday morning.

They had not been in town two hours before they were all conferring at high speed in the office of Charlie Stoneham, chief proprietor of the Giants. At 10:30 they helped themselves to Mr. Stoneham's company cigars, all except Hornsby, who said he would have a chew, and by noon Hornsby had ceased to be a stockholder in the Cardinals.

Hornsby then went to the Polo Grounds, put on his uniform and got to work in the game between the Giants and all that was left of the Washington club. The settlement was effected so stealthily that his honor, Magistrate Francis X. McQuaid, part owner of the Giants, came up to Hornsby at the batting cage and asked him how the negotiations were going.

"It's all over," Hornsby told him. "They bought me out this morning."

"The hell you say," exclaimed his honor, who hastened back to tell Jim Tierney, the firm's secretary, who was standing at the pass gate enfolded in an enormous overcoat, checking in the free trade.

"Hornsby's settled with them," the judge announced.

"The hell you say," said Tierney.

And, as word of the new Missouri compromise spread among the shivering patches of human crocuses in the grandstand, echo answered echo with an incredulous "the hell you say."

Heydler appears to have been the man who crowded the negotiations to a settlement, for he was determined that Hornsby must not play without the league's consent, and just as determined to keep the league out of court.

Moreover, the $22,535 difference between the Hornsby price and the league's best offer of Friday was trivial money as compared with the cost of a fight.

Who Paid What?

Heydler neglected to say what portion of the money was to be paid by Breadon, what portion by the league and what portion by the Giants. Even in his long statement of Friday evening explaining what didn't happen in Pittsburgh, he overlooked this phase of the matter. But Hornsby and Fahey freely related that Breadon's offer stopped at $75,000 whereas the league and the Giants each agreed to put up $12,500 more as the price of peace, the stock to go to Breadon anyway.

Therefore it is likely that the Giants and the league each added $6,000 to the pot today as Breadon is a most obstinate man, particularly when he is asked to pay money unnecessarily to Rogers Hornsby.

Now, having warmed a bumble-bee in their bosom only to be stung an expensive and painful sting by the same, the National league will make a law for itself to forbid this humane practice in the future. In fact, there was a rueful paragraph in Mr. Heydler's announcement of the settlement which said that henceforth all active players undoubtedly would be ineligible to hold stock.

Aside from the notice which he diverted from Babe Ruth to himself, an important thing in the present state of the business rivalry between the Giants and the Yankees, Hornsby emerged from his proprietorship of the Cardinals with a profit of $47,485. The latest corrected edition of the pertinent figures states that he contracted to pay $52,515 for the stock about one year ago. He paid $5,000 down and $18,000 further in retiring his notes which were secured, incidentally, by Breadon. Now he will pay off the balance, take his profit and waive $17,505 which he says is due in the form of undivided profits at the rate of $15 a share. One of the many reasons why Hornsby dislikes Mr. Breadon with such fervor is that Breadon, through the exercise of his controlling interest, refused to divide this money but kept it in the treasury of the firm.

Ban Johnson Expects War With Landis

League President Predicts Run-in With Czar of Pastime, Having Taken Up Work.

BY DON MAXWELL.

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution.)

Chicago, Ill., April 9.—Ban Johnson, president of the American league, thoroughly rejuvenated by his recent vacation, is back in the city, full of pep, and it was freely predicted that there would be a renewal of the baseball political war between Johnson and Judge Landis, the high commissioner.

When Johnson was given an indefinite leave of absence on January 23, it was generally understood that he was through, permanently, as chief of the junior league. This leave followed his collapse at a meeting of the club owners and resulted in indefinite postponement of Judge Landis' famous "show-down" meeting scheduled for the following day.

Expected the End.

This "show-down" meeting, it was freely predicted, would have resulted either in Johnson's elimination or the resignation of Judge Landis. It was reported that the American league magnates had voted 7 to 1 against Johnson, but his physical breakdown caused them to defer action. They them voted him an indefinite vacation, which everyone interpreted as the end of his career in baseball.

Now that he has returned and taken the reins of control from the hands of Frank Navin, owner of the Detroit Tigers, who was installed as acting president, a resumption of warfare is predicted. In some quarters it is said the first move must come from the American league owners, who, it is said, agreed to call a meeting and act upon the matters deferred at the January meeting, in the event Johnson recovered from his illness. Failing to do this, Judge Landis may call the meeting himself.

At Johnson's office it was said any statement must come from him. He had departed for the day.

Judge Landis is back from his tour of the camps. Asked to comment upon the situation, he smiled and said his golf game was rotten and that he hoped it did not rain Tuesday when the season opens.

PENNSYLVANIA NINE BEGINS TRIP SOUTH

Philadelphia, April 9.—The University of Pennsylvania baseball team, pioneers in making southern baseball trips, will leave here next Tuesday night, for the annual trek to the balmy land below the Mason-Dixon line.

Back in 1890, 37 years ago, a Pennstylevania team made a trip south for a series of four games. Two were played in Washington, one in Baltimore and the fourth at Charlottesville, Va.

Seven games will be played this year. The first contest is scheduled for Wednesday with Washington and Lee, at Lexington, Va. The following day the same team will be played. The University of North Carolina will be met on Friday at Chapel Hill and Duke will be engaged at Durham, N. C., the following day.

The University of Richmond will be met on Monday at Richmond; Tuesday, Georgetown will be engaged at Washington, and the tour will be concluded with Maryland at College Park, Md., on Wednesday a week.

Last year the team won four, lost two and tied one on its southern trip. Judging by the strength displayed by southern teams against visiting northerners this season, Coach Cariss and his team will have anything but an easy time of it.

The keen competition for virtually every position on the team has made it difficult to select the members of the squad for the trip. Indications points to five pitchers, two catchers, nine infielders and five outfielders entraining for the trip.

American, National Leagues Get Under Way Tuesday

Teams Await Opening Gong With High Hopes

EW YORK, April 9.—(AP)—Most of the major clubs came home today to let the fans judge for themselves the results of the game's record-breaking player shake-up and decide whether the experts are correct in predicting a five-club battle in each pennant race with the Pirates and Athletics as favorite.

The conclusion of the exhibition campaign over the week-end paved the way for as colorful and, as the boys say, as intriguing a season as either big league has ever faced. The opening salvoes will be fired next Tuesday.

The somewhat widespread agitation isn't all due to the promise of an exciting tussle for positions or the novelty of the situation that finds neither of the present champions, the Cards and Yankees, regarded as favorites in the pre-season "dope."

Most of the nation's fandom is whooping it up as seldom before because it is keenly interested in whether Ty Cobb, aided by Eddie Collins and Zach Wheat, will ignite the Athletics' pennant fire again; whether Tris Speaker, sharing with Cobb the urge for a "campaign of redemption," will make a contender out of the Senators again; whether Bill Carrigan can revive Red Sox spirit after a 10-year layoff; what the Giants will accomplish with Rogers Hornsby as captain and Eddie Roush added to the outfield; how eight new managers fare, especially Donie Bush with the Pirates and Bob O'Farrell with the world's champion Cardinals, and whether Babe Ruth will prove he is worth the $70,000 that the Yankees have agreed to pay him for the next three years.

A Big Send-Off.

These are the high spots looming ahead for a season in which personalities will play as prominent a part as factors of team ambition and triumph. They will have a big send-off on Tuesday, the opening day, when the Athletics start their quest to fulfill Connie Mack's pennant dream by battling Ruth and the other Ruppert rifles at the Yankee stadium.

As far as the pennant races go, they will develop contests in which the two Pennsylvania entries, the Athletics and Pirates, will meet their stiffest opposition from the two metropolitan contenders, Yankees and Giants, in the opinions of more than twoscore baseball writers who contributed their views for the first time to a consensus compiled by the Associated Press.

Analysis of the views of these experts, probably the best qualified of all to gauge relative values, shows that 29 pick the Athletics to win in the American as against nine favoring the Yankees, three the Tigers and one each the Senators and Cleveland. In the National league 19 select the Pirates and 16 the Giants, while four favor the Reds and only three the Cards. The Chicago Cubs are rated as the "outsider" of the National league's five principal contenders.

BAN JOHNSON PREDICTS CLOSE RACE.

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—Ban Johnson, president of the American league, believes the race for championship honors starting Tuesday will find five clubs battling it out, with any one of them having a chance.

The American league executive tonight gave Boston a chance to be in the fight because Bill Carrigan has taken over the management of the Red Sox. Carrigan, Johnson says, has the courage and character to produce a winning club.

The shake-up resulting in five new managers in the league is bound to stir interest in the 1927 campaign, Johnson believes.

A Splendid Race.

"My opinion that a splendid race is in prospect for the American league this season is borne out by reports from umpires of the league who have been with the teams in the training period and from news writers of accepted good judgment who have added their confirmation," President Johnson said.

"It seems to be the collective impression that five clubs at least will be in a pennant fight in which the winner is a toss-up, so well matched in ability are they estimated to be, while there is not a club in the league that should be counted out of a first-division chance.

AMERICAN LEAGUE UMPS ANNOUNCED.

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—President Ban Johnson, of the American league, tonight assigned umpires for opening games of the season Tuesday as follows:

Cleveland—Connolly, Geisel and Rowland.

St. Louis—Dineen and Nallin.

Washington—Owens and Ormsby.

New York—Hildebrand, Evans and McGowan.

DAVE SHADE TO GET CRACK AT WALKER

(By Leased Wire to The Constitution.)

Chicago, Ill., April 9.—Dave Shade, the California middleweight, who meets Phil Krug, of Newark, N. J., at the Coliseum, on Tuesday night, will be given a chance to wrest the world's 160-pound title from Mickey Walker in August, according to an announcement made by Jack Kearns, manager of the middleweight title holder.

Not only did Kearns announce that Walker will defend his title against Shade in Chicago, but he also said Mickey will meet Tommy Milligan, the middleweight champion of Great Britain in London between July 1 and 16. This will be a championship affair, 20 rounds to a decision. Walker will receive a flat guarantee of $100,000, according to Kearns.

Part of this guarantee will be placed in an American bank. Al Woods, a representative of Kearns, is now on the way to New York from London with the articles and part of the money Walker will receive. If everything is satisfactory, Walker and Kearns will leave for England the latter part of May as the agreement calls for the champion to be on the battle ground at least 4 weeks in advance of the contest.

Charles Cochran, the English promoter, will put on the match. An open air arena seating 100,000 persons will be built in London.

Before he left for New York, Kearns conferred with promoter Jim Mullen and practically accepted Mullen's terms for a match with Shade. The match, however, depends on the outcome of the fight with Milligan in London. Leo P. Flynn, Shade's manager, will be here Sunday and Mullen intends to get his signature to a set of articles as he is satisfied Kearns will go through with the deal.

CALIFORNIA WINS OVER WASHINGTON

Oakland, Calif., April 9.—(AP)—The scroll of time turned back five years today as in a few speeding minutes California's varsity crew achieved its greatest ambition—to beat Washington.

It was as throbbing, spectacular race as has been witnessed here in years as the Blue and Gold shell streaked down the three-mile course to finish in 17:27, three lengths ahead of their traditional rivals, who last year won the national championship.

At the same time it ended for Washington rowing supremacy on the coast that endured since 1921.

The California crew taking a stroke of 40 to the minute, glided into the lead never to be headed in the spurt up the Oakland estuary.

While thousands of spectators lining both sides of the waterway cheered them on to victory, the Bears increased their lead slowly but surely and at the one-mile post a boat length separated the rival squads.

Kaer May Become Low Hurdle Whizz

Los Angeles, April 9.—In "Man o' War" Morton Kaer, all-American halfback during the 1926 grid season, Coach Dean Cromwell may have a successor to Kenneth Grumbles for the low hurdles at Southern California. Kaer, running his first race of the year, clipped off a 24 seconds event here last Saturday against California. His feat was a complete upset since the Bears were figured to have two men ahead of him at the finish of the race.

Last year Kaer reported for track for the first time after a lay-off which followed a brilliant freshman season. He tried to run the low hurdles but never chalked up a single point all year. He was taken to the I. C. A. as a gamble and failed to qualify.

With Grumbles, twice national intercollegiates and 1926 A. A. U. champion, gone the Trojans were woefully weak in the low hurdles. Kaer reported late for track and little was expected of him until his race last week.

Kaer has another year of track after this season and may win an I. C. A. title for Southern California before he leaves the Trojan institution.

Edvin Wide Wins 1-Mile Handicap

Brooklyn, N. Y., April 9.—Edvin Wide, of Sweden, won the one-mile special handicap at the 13th Regiment armory tonight, but failed to set a new record. His time was 4 minutes and 15 seconds, three seconds over the record.

John Theobold, of the New York Athletic club, was second and John Barnes, of the St. Anselm's Athletic club, third.

Coolidge To Toss First Baseball In Opening Game

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—President Coolidge will throw out the ball for the opening game of the American league season here Tuesday between Washington and Boston.

While his right wrist is slightly lame, the president feels he will be no worse off than the crippled Washington team, several of whom are on the injured list.

Both Walter Johnson, a favorite of Mr. Coolidge and star pitcher of the Senators, and Manager Harris are out of the lineup because of injuries.

VOIGT WINS GOLF TITLE AT PINEHURST

Pinehurst, N. C., April 9.—(AP)—Playing over a water-soaked course, George Voigt, Washington, today won the united north and south amateur golf championship. He defeated Eugene Homans, Englewood, N. J., schoolboy, 4 and 2, in the finals which had been pared down from 36 to 18 holes because of a driving rain that fell throughout the morning.

The committee in charge of the event decided to permit an 18-hole match to decide the event because Homans faced the necessity of getting back to school Monday morning. This would have made it necessary for him to forfeit to Voigt if there was no play today.

Homans started badly. He lost the first and second holes when Voigt scored pars on each. He took the third with a birdie three and the fourth with a par three to even the match.

The fifth was halved, but Homans went one up on the sixth when Voigt was in trouble. Voigt evened it on the seventh with a birdie two, sinking a putt from off the green, and they were all square through the eighth. Voigt went one up at the ninth with a par four after Homans overplayed the green. The next two were halved in par, but Voigt took the twelfth to become two up when Homans missed a short putt for a half.

The thirteenth was halved, but the fourteenth went to Voigt when Holmes' second was in a trap and he overplayed the green, Voigt sinking a birdie four. On the fifteenth Voigt held Homans to a half after hooking his tee shot behind a tree. Voigt won the sixteenth with a putt from off the green after Homans went into a trap.

The cards:

Voigt, out	444	455	254	—37
In	443	444	4	—28—65
Homans, out	763	354	355	—41

NO OPPOSITION IN BIG SHOW FOR ATHLETICS

New York, April 9.—The road to an American league pennant for the Philadelphia Athletics this season is remarkably devoid of serious opposition.

The Mackmen should win by ten games unless some extraordinary disaster overtakes the club.

Cornelius McGillicuddy, in fact, has such an opportunity as has not come the way of an American league manager in many years. Sizing up the other clubs, even in the flush of early April optimism, there does not seem to be a pennant possibility in the lot.

The New York Yankees can hardly hope to repeat with their present pitching staff. Detroit is strong offensively, but also lacks sufficient number of high class twirlers. Washington, already crippled with injuries and illness, is in the same boats as far as pitching strength goes. The others are hopelessly out of the race.

Chicago, St. Louis, Boston and Cleveland present a solid second division group which probably will resist the effort of any of the other contenders to flop lower than fourth place.

With an outfield that includes Ty Cobb, Zack Wheat, Walter French, Bill Lamar, Al Simmons and Eddie Collins, Max Bishop, Joe Boley, Jimmy Dykes, Sam Hale and Chick Galloway to choose from, two catchers such as Gordon Cochrane and Ralph Perkins and the nucleus of the league's best pitchig staff in Howard Ehmke, Bob Grove, Sam Gray, Ed Rommell, George Walberg, Charles Willis, Jack Quinn and Joe Pate, the Athletics have one of the strongest ball playing aggregations that ever moved up to a big league barrier at the start of a season.

The opposition scarcely can hope to do more than keep within sight of this outfit once the White Elephants start stampeding toward the pennant.

Yet the very fact that such promising ball clubs frequently come croppers is what provides the national pastime with its proper fascination.

GRIND BEGINS FOR COLLEGE OARSMEN SOON

New York, April 9.—Competitive college rowing starts this week, when Rusty Callow's Washington oarsmen, winners of the 1926 regatta at Poughkeepsie on the Hudson, meet a powerful California crew on the estuary at Oakland.

This race next Saturday will be one of several which are to determine whether the Bears will send their crews east next June.

It is still too chilly in the east for college oarmen. The navy, bent upon regaining intercollegiate honors this season, rows M. I. T. on the Severn April 23. A week later, the University of Pennsylvania varsity, junior varsity and freshmen crews visit Annapolis.

Yale, long supreme in eastern rowing, will play host at Derby on May 7 to Columbia and Pennsylvania, while on the same afternoon Harvard will meet the Navy and Princeton will row against M. I. T. on the Charles.

Authorities in charge of the intercollegiate regatta, which will be rowed June 29, expects to have eight crews on the Hudson this year. In addition to Columbia, Cornell, Syracuse and Penn there may be Washington, Wisconsin, California and the Middies.

Additional interest is attached to rowing this season because many of the oarsmen will be looking forward to the chance of going to Amsterdam for the 1928 Olympic games.

SOUTH ATLANTIC ALWAYS BRINGS OWN DEFEAT

:: Court Veteran's Obit Hurried; Plans Summer Campaign ::

BY WHITNER CARY.

A few days ago a most persistent rumor floated around in Atlanta tennis circles that Frank Owens, better known as "Hop," had taken too much liberty with his right arm and as a result had contracted what in fashionable net parlance is called a tennis elbow. As this ailment is supposed to guarantee the owner permanent retirement from all court competition, the writer of these lines, having followed the tennis career of this star for some 10 years, concluded to write his tennis obituary. Thinking at the last moment that it might be well to furnish the corpus delecti and that there might be a possible mistake, I visited the said Mr. Owens and between a multitude of phone calls gleaned from his own lips that his tennis death was slightly premature and that he expected to be among those present at many of the southern tournaments this coming season.

So I was placed in the rather embarrassing position of having written a perfectly good obituary with the unfortunate grace of having no one to assume the leading role. But by omitting reference to flowers and pallbearers and other kindred subjects I find that I might just as well put a few facts before the tennis loving public concerning the net career of this Atlanta player.

Studied at Tech.

"Hop" first appeared on the tennis horizon when a student at Georgia Tech back in the dark ages of 1915-19 and since those dim and distant years has blazed a passage across the southern court firmament as few racket stars have ever done. His list of honors reads like the orders of a pre-war Russian grand duke and runs the gauntlet from club championships to the southern title, with intermediate stops to gather in a few state coronets.

His four years at Tech brought him the southern intercollegiate singles title on two occasions and twice he was coholder of the doubles crown. These early triumphs proved but stepping stones to the greater honors that lay just around the bend.

It was in the spring of 1919 that he first crossed my path and from there to the present day his record is fairly well impressed on my mind.

It was the summer of his graduation year that he first made his bid to outside fame. Greeneville, South Carolina, and the championship of the Carolinas furnished the setting and climax for his first step up the tennis ladder of fame.

He came to that event fresh from college, full of pep and with such an aroma of romance surrounding him that he was easily the social favorite with the flappers of that bygone era. No one in that town had ever heard of him and when the tournament committee received his entry, with the request that he be given a doubles partner, there was not a great deal of excitement created or fear thrown into the hearts of the local racket wielders. Along about that time another entry was received from an Atlanta boy, who was later to startle the entire south with the brilliance of his game and to win the affection of every one by his lovable disposition and wonderful sportsmanship. I refer to Jack Caldwell, that splendid chap whose lips were sealed by the dreaded flu 18 months ago just when his tennis star had reached the zenith of the southern sky.

Teamed.

Well, the committee decided as both were unknown and from Atlanta that no harm could come by teaming them in the doubles. This was done with the amazing result that this kid team, "Hop" being still in that happy state where two shaves per week sufficed to keep his beard in bounds, and little Jack barely over 16, walked off with the doubles championship.

From this auspicious beginning "Hop" began to scale the tennis heights. Since that day the Carolinas doubles title has fallen to him three times and the singles crown has rested on his brow once. In four other years he has been runnerup in the singles. The Carolina singles event was always a tough proposition for "Hop." He twice fell before V. M. Manning and only last season bowed to John Temple Graves in five heartbreaking sets under a sun of tropical proclivities. His one victory was achieved in 1924 when he defeated his fellow townsman, Caldwell, in one of the greatest singles encounters ever played on a Greenville court.

But while South Carolina, although giving him his first big triumph, was stingy with singles honors in the after years, such was not the case with her sister state to the north. Seven times has the name of Owens adorned the entry list of the North Carolina championship and six times has he emerged with the singles diadem resting on his cranium. In addition to these triumphs he has won the Old North State doubles title enough times to make the performance monotonous.

Going further away from home surroundings we find him invading the sovereign state of Tennessee on several occasions and on at least two of these returning to his home hoarded with plate bearing the inscription of singles champion of the Volunteer stronghold.

No Can Do.

But like all great warriors and conquerors of the past, there were some campaigns that brought nothing but disaster. It is therefore not amiss to sandwich in at this juncture one section of the southern area where his feet are yet to climb the lofty heights where tread only the champions—I speak of Augusta, in his home state. No matter how good "Hop" might be going immediately before the South Atlantic championship, the tennis event that is traditional in that hospitable city; no matter how strong his game might be immediately after the final curtain had fallen on that tournament, there was nothing but sorrow and defeat for the house of Owens when the roll of the victors were read in the sultry stillness of the evening air bathing the Augusta clubhouse. He tried nobly on several occasions, but each time was repulsed with heavy loss.

Whether it was fate or better tennis that defeated him in this event will never be known, but win he never did.

Speaking of fate, calls vividly to mind one occasion where some outside influence, be it fate, destiny or cupid, entered into partnership with his opponents and caused him to take the worst licking he probably ever received in tournament play.

The occasion was one of the early rounds of the doubles of the 1920 South Atlantic championship. "Hop" had teamed with Stewart Harris, who some of the older inhabitants of this city will remember as quite a good player of the vintage of that day. The two made a strong combination and were considered by many as having a splendid chance for the doubles title.

Too Much Telephone.

In that particular round they encountered Bothwell Lee, of Augusta, and "Mutt" Kennedy, then of that city but now a resident of Atlanta. The opening game was fiercely fought and the large gallery had settled back in gleeful anticipation of seeing a sparkling match. At this point a club domestic of ebony hue approached the court and in an awed voice informed Owens that a lady was calling him on long distance. Time was taken out while "Hop" conversed on sundry matters. Would that I could here draw the veil. But truth compels me to state that when the sinking sun cast its parting rays on the doubles scoreboard that afternoon it recorded the astonishing fact that Owens and Harris had been defeated by the score of 6-1, 6-0. I have often wondered what that conversation was. Some day, it is possible "Hop" will inform me.

Probably the greatest year of his career was in 1922 when he flashed under the wire a winner in the southern championship, defeating V. M. Manning in straight sets.

Since that day he has been a prominent figure in both singles and doubles in every southern tournament save 1923, when an operation kept him out for most of the season.

1926 LEADERS IN BASEBALL BACK AGAIN

New York, April 8.—(United News.)—A niche in baseball's hall of fame one season, and where is he the next?

A survey by the United News as the major league clubs edge up to the barrier for the 1927 pennant race finds some of the players who stood out as leaders in their respective departments last year wearing new uniforms, and some wearing no uniforms at all.

Bob O'Farrell, St. Louis catcher, voted the most valuable player in the National league, has been elevated to the managership of the Cardinals.

George Burns, Cleveland first baseman, selected as the most valuable American league player, remains the mainstay of the Indians' infield.

The batting leaders, "Bubbles" Hargrave, of the Reds, and Heinie Manush, of the Tigers, are at their old posts. Hargrave was a hold-out at the start of the training season, but signed up and has been doing most of the heavy hitting for the Reds in this spring's exhibition games. Manush has been moved back to third place in the Detroit batting order and is walloping the ball in training.

Johnny Mostil, the fastest man in the American league, leader in stolen bases in 1926, and generally rated as the best outfielder in the circuit from a defensive point of view, is at his home in Whiting, Ind., recovering from an attempt at suicide. He may return to the game late in May if his wounds heal.

Bishop Benched.

Max Bishop, of the Athletics, the best defensive infielder in the American league last year, has been benched to make room for Eddie Collins, who will start at second base for the Mackmen.

Hughie Critz, the leading second-sacker in the National league in 1926, is a hold-out down in Mississippi.

Jim Cooney, of the Cubs, who won his way to the hall of fame as the best shortstop in his league, is out of the game with a bad arm, replaced by a youngster named English, of whom Manager Joe McCarthy entertains high hopes.

The leading pitchers, Ray Kremer, in the National, and George Uhle and "Lefty" Grove, in the American, are at their old posts. Kremer has been pitching great ball for the Pirates in the exhibition games on the coast and in Texas. Uhle remains the Indians' best bet in the box, while Grove has shown tremendous improvement, even over his 1926 form. The lanky Philadelphia southpaw has had the best batters of the opposing teams in exhibition games breaking their backs trying to fathom his speed this year.

Bassler Back.

J. L. Bassler, Detroit backstop, who didn't make an error in 1926 and allowed but one passed ball, is back in shape behind the bat. Forced out by injuries last season, Bassler led the league catchers and has returned to first-string form, which means that Shea, obtained by George Moriarty from the coast at considerable expense, will probably warm the bench a good bit of the season.

George Kelly, who entered the hall of fame as the leading first baseman of the National league, has been traded to the Reds and apparently will have to shift over and play second base this season.

Paul Waner, of Pittsburgh, who hit the most three-baggers, and Hack Wilson, of Chicago, leading home run hitter of the National, are at their regular posts, depended upon by their managers even more this season than last.

And just as there is but one hall of fame, so is there only one Babe Ruth, now the highest salaried player in the game, drawing down $70,000 a year for the next three seasons. The Babe led his league in homers, runs batted in and runs scored during 1926, and, while he suffered a charley horse in Florida and has been slow to start this year, everything seems to indicate that his is one niche which will not be vacant when the time comes to hand around the rewards of 1927.

Sandlot League To Meet Tuesday

A meeting of the Sandlot league will be held Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the office of Sam Saltzman. The baseball schedule for members of the league will be arranged and other important business transacted.

All games scheduled for Saturday were called off on account of the prevalent wet weather and they will be played at a later date.

YARN SPINNERS ARE EXPECTED IN MARKET SOON

Charlotte, N. C., April 9.—(AP)—The turning point in the yarn situation is expected to be reached either this month or during May, according to a bulletin issued today by the Southern Yarn Spinners' association.

Indications are that yarn customers are nearing the limit of their supplies and will be forced into the market soon to make purchases, it was stated.

The yarn market was reported unchanged.

"Outlook Is Good," Says Judge Landis About 1927 Race

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—Kenesaw Mountain Landis, $65,000-a-year commissioner of baseball, today gave out a four-word statement anent the ripping off of the baseball lid next Tuesday.

"The outlook is good," he said.

"That sums it up, doesn't it? And it gets away from a lot of bunk."

So saying, he presented his interviewer with a brand new cigar and went about his business of enjoying himself.

Tilden Wins Tennis Crown at Asheville

Asheville, N. C., April 9.—(AP)—William T. Tilden, 2nd, of Philadelphia, America's foremost ranking tennis player, won the singles championship in the Blue Ridge tournament at Asheville country club this afternoon, defeating George Lott, Jr., of Chicago, after having had two sets against him. The score was 4-6, 6-4, 4-6, 6-1, 6-2. The last set was played in a steady rain.

Miss Clara Zinke, of Cincinnati, 17 years old, the youngest entrant in the tournament, won the new women's singles championship of western North Carolina, by defeating Mrs. Edward Raymond of New York, before a large gallery, 6-4, 6-4.

Senators' Pilot Shifts Lineup

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—Manager Harris, of the Washington Senators, today ordered an eleventh-hour shakeup in his club's lineup, sending Ossie Bluege and Buddy Myer back to their last year's positions of third base and shortstop.

During the Florida training trip he had tried out Myer at third and Bluege at short field post. Harris said the change would be permanent.

DAVIDSON JOINS MULKEY COMPANY

R. C. Davidson, who for the past 13 years has been connected with the Inland-Delray & Worcester Salt Co., taking care of the Georgia, Alabama and Florida trade, has announced that on April 15 he will become associated with the Mulkey Salt company, of Detroit, Mich. There will be no change in his residence or territory.

Many Teams Entered In Penn Relay Races

Philadelphia, April 9,—The thirty-third annual University of Pennsylvania relay carnival, on April 29 and 30, will be larger in point of teams entered and in individuals, according to H. Jamison Swarts, manager of the gigantic two-day carnival.

The team entry list closed last week with a last-minute rush that carried the totals over the top. More than half the states in the union have teams entered with foreign competition again assuming a prominent part among the entries.

Some idea of the magnitude of the carnival can be gained from the fact that it occupies two days from 10 o'clock on Friday until 5:40 Saturday afternoon and that 105 events are run off in that time.

Over 225 officials are engaged on the two days to see that the races are properly run. These include judges, timers, measurers, clerks of the course and other officials.

The races are run off with machine-like precision. Every race has a time to start and an approximate time is computed for the finishing of the race. The starters in the event following are ready to toe the mark, a few seconds after the conclusion of the previous race.

Championship Races.

The world's championship sprint races in which Olympic, world's and intercollegiate record holders are entered, the 400-meter hurdle race in which Lord Burghley is entered, the shuttle hurdle relay, the decathlon and the usual championship relay races from a quarter mile to four miles are a few of the events that will be contested during the two days.

The special events such as the pole vault, high jump, hop, skip and jump, discus, hammer and javelin throws, the 120-yard high hurdle and other events are drawing a record-breaking crop of intercollegiate stars from all sections of the country.

A week remains before the closing of the lists for individual entries. The entries thus far indicate a greater array of specialists than at any time in the past. As usual the decathlon is enjoying its popularity.

Many Competitors.

All around athletes from every section of the country who are training for the Olympic tryouts that are only a year off, are anxious to test their ability in the ten gruelling events on the decathlon program. Tony Plansky, last year's winner, will probably be the only absentee from those who started last year with an increasing number of entrants who did not compete in the past.

The western conference teams which every year enter the championships will again be on hand in the team races and in the special events. Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio State and Chicago, have all entered. Michigan State, Notre Dame, Ohio Wesleyan, De Pauw and many other western institutions are listed to compete.

Harvard, after a lapse of one year, has entered a full team. The Crimson will have men entered in every special event and will compete in the many relay races on the program. Harvard gives the east a complete entry. Vanderbilt, Georgia Tech, Alabama Poly and a number of other southern institutions are entered.

Roland Locks, Nebraska star and world's record holder for the 220-yard dash, will arrive here a week before the events to finish his training on Franklin field for the special 100 and 220 with Jackson Scholz and Henry Russell.

OUTFIELD BIG WORRY OF SCHALK

BY BRIAN BELL.

Shreveport, La., April 9.—(AP)—Ray Schalk likes his job with his boss.

The new manager of the Chicago White Sox, promoted after 16 years as the club's star catcher, has enjoyed his work so far and declares he is working for a "wonderful man," Charles A. Comiskey, the "Old Roman."

"We have a wonderful gang of fellows here," said Schalk. "They are all hustling, and I don't think you can keep a team with spirit like this down in the race. We are not claiming any pennant, but I expect to see our club in the first division.

"We will have the pitching. I think we have as good pitchers as any club in baseball, and after all, in the last analysis, the pitching tells the tale. We seem about to pick up two dependable left-handers in the new crop, Bert Cole, who is no novice, and Barnabe, a youngster. 'Red' Faber is taking his time getting in shape, but he will be ready. He will give a good account of himself when he has his rest.

"Wardie (Aaron Ward) and Peck (Roger Peckinpaugh) look all right to me. I think they will give us a jam-up combination at second base and shortstop. And in Hunnefield we have a wonderful young infielder.

"The outfield of course is 'shot' by the removal of Mostil from consideration at this time. We are fortunate in having been able to add two such good men to the outfield group as Ike Boone and Moore.

"As it shapes up now, it looks like Falk, Barrett and Boone to start in the outfield with Moore in reserve. We will get a fifth outfielder by the time the season opens, I think."

Women's Division In Y Sport Loop

At a recent meeting of the Y Church Athletic association, a separate branch of athletics for women was organized.

Miss Addie Lou Gilbert, of St. Mark's Methodist church, was elected president and will be in charge of this division. Miss Cone, of First Methodist, was chosen secretary and treasurer.

This division will sponsor basketball, tennis and volley ball as its major sports.

The volley ball league will get under way on Friday, April 22. The Y. W. C. A. court has been selected as the regular playing court and all games will be played there.

Four teams are already in the league and two more are needed. Any team desiring to join should see Mr. Cunningham at the Y. M. C. A.

HESTER REPORTS ON COTTON BALE RIVER WEIGHTS

New Orleans, April 9.—(AP)—Secretary H. G. Hester, of the New Orleans cotton exchange, today issued a statement of weights of 12,753,680 bales of cotton handled at outports and across the Mississippi, Ohio and Potomac rivers overland to American manufacturers outside the cotton belt during the months of August to March, inclusive, showing an average per bale of 520 36-100 against 514 7-100 for the same period last year.

Detailed averages:

Texas ports, 524 9-100 against 514 62-100 last year.

Louisiana ports, 520 53-100 against 524 53-100.

Alabama, etc., 528 1-100 against 522 42-100.

Georgia ports, 515 17-100 against 501 96-100.

South Carolina ports, 502 against 490.

North Carolina ports, 488 against 484.

Tennessee, etc., 513 60-100 against 516 94-100.

These averages are based on the official returns of secretaries and superintendents of the exchanges and experts at ports, etc., in the states named.

U. S. Statistician Hits Crop Bureau Reporting

The farmer of cotton is subjected to another great injustice through United States laws which created the bureau of crop forecasts and reporting, Marion Amorous, statistician for the state department of agriculture, said today. "This service," he said, "has been extended in the past even to reporting the intentions to plant of the several million farmers in the south, and guesses of the acreage that each farmer has had in mind to plant in cotton. I recall two or three years back the publication by the department of the number of acres that would be planted in cotton several weeks before, I, or any other farmer in my county, had put a single seed in the ground. This crop reporting business of the government has been in operation for many years, and my survey of their reports for 22 years proves each year incorrect reports—mere guesses up or down, and not a single report has ever benefited a hundred farmers in the whole United States.

"The theory is that cotton prices are based on supply and demand. The reports of what will be, a statistical guess only of the department, that the crop will be so many million acres, forecasts or guesses at the supply, which forms a basis for trading on the exchange of the future market only. The price of the cotton that will be brought into the market by the farmer in September or October, therefore, is fixed six or eight months in advance, with no authorized statement or guess as to the probable need of the mills or consumption demand. If the department is making their forecasts of probable amount of the crop, would, coincident with this publication, publish the requirements of the mills for the same period, the traders on the exchange would have some sentiment by which they could balance supply and demand in fixing prices. It is a curious fact that the sentiment created on the price fixing exchange of less volume of crop, often lowers the price, and when higher amounts are forecast, always lowers the price of cotton. This is absolutely the effect at the season that the farmers are marketing their cotton. A statement of a rain in Texas, or a drought in Oklahoma, creates sentiment that changes the price up or down in cotton.

"We have three supposed primary cotton markets existing in the United States—New York, New Orleans and Chicago. The prices of cotton each day on these exchanges vary so many cents per pound, yet the supply of cotton is identical at each location of the exchanges. There are 10 other United States law established cotton markets. The supply of cotton existing in the whole United States is the same at each, yet the price of cotton at each is never the same.

"The almost universal impression that cotton prices reflect under the law of supply and demand I deny its correctness, and am willing to debate it with anybody to the contrary by the practical facts. The price of cotton in buying from the farmer is dependent, not on the law of supply and demand, but on the charity and benevolence of the buyer. Can anyone wonder why the farmer is always a bankrupt with these facts before him?"

15 INDEPENDENTS FORM OIL MERGER

New York, April 9.—(AP)—Consolidation of 15 Far Western oil companies, whose properties have a combined value of $30,000,000, into a large California independent concern, was announced here today.

The companies include the Julian Petroleum corporation, Marine corporation, Marine Refining corporation, Seaboard Petroleum corporation, Ascot Refining company, Jet Oil company, Southern California Pipe Line company, Sierra Refining company, all operating in southern California oil fields, Apache Oil & Refining company, operating a refinery at Phoenix, Ariz.; Rice Oil company and Fulton Oil company, operating in the Kevinsuburst field, Montana, and Canyon Oil company and Southwest Oil & Development company, operating in the Amarillo field in Texas.

A complete unit in production, refining and transportation of crude oil and wholesale and retail marketing of gasoline, lubricating oils and other petroleum products will be represented in the enlarged company. If developed and approved the oil properties will have an appraised valuation of $20,000,000. The companies involved in the transaction had 172 producing wells at the close of 1926, about 132 redrilling, deepening or idle, pending corrective work, and 19 drilling.

No steps have been taken to select a successor for Mr. Tregoe who plans to make his home in California after his retirement.

MINORITY LOSES INJUNCTION FIGHT IN RAILWAY SUIT

Chicago, April 9.—(United Press.) Reorganization of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, which was forced into receivership and sold several months ago, moved one step closer today when Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson refused a minority injunction against reorganization plans.

The reorganization plans mapped out by Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and National City Company of New York, purchasers of the railroad, were approved by Federal Judge Wilkerson several weeks ago. A group

Conner Finds South Now Far-Visioned in Seizing of Opportunities for Trade.

PASSING ILLS ARE CONQUERED

Energy in Pursuit of Business Is Having Vital Effect on Fortunes of Section.

Following is the second article of a series from the pen of Owen A. Conner, financial editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger and national authority on American trade conditions and outlook, written at the conclusion of a survey of the new south.

BY OWEN A. CONNER.

Last autumn, when the price for raw cotton dropped to 12 cents a pound, a wave of sympathy for the Southland spread throughout the country. Twelve cents was 4 or more cents below the average cost of production. True, the record-breaking crop of staple would send a heavy volume of cash into the cotton-raising states, but that did not alter the fact that most of the farmers would lose heavily where they had hoped to reap a great profit. Very, very few would escape with light losses. They had been counting on a minimum of 20 cents and had hopes that they might get 23 or 24 cents for the fruit of their labors.

Ten years or more ago such a state of affairs would have spelled disaster for all that vast region south of Virginia, from the Atlantic ocean westward to the outer edges of the Gulf of Mexico. That the cotton districts suffered a severe blow none will deny, but the blow has not by any means taken on the proportions of a disaster. Indeed, business men in the affected areas declare emphatically that general trade is steadily improving and that they have ceased thinking about the price of cotton.

Diversification of crops and of industries saved the south from serious consequences when the record crop sent quotations downward. Much has already been accomplished in turning the land over to other products than cotton, but the movement for still further extension of activity into broader fields is being continued with energy along well-informed, efficient lines. Bankers, business men, scientific experts in agriculture and the farmers themselves are behind the movement, determined that the south shall never again be a one-crop land.

Bankers Greatest Aid.

Probably it is the bankers who have accomplished more and who are achieving more today in bringing about diversification than any other one section of the business community. To take Atlanta as an example, one finds a city with unusually well-managed banking institutions, operating along lines of the most modern efficiency standards, and adhering to a program of community helpfulness that must surely make for greater prosperity for their city and the farming and industrial region of which it is the center.

These men are at work today to repair the damage done by the failure of a chain of about 90 country district banks—little institutions in small towns. That they failed is said to have been because they were established in communities that did not really need a bank and where banking profit, even in good times, would be barely sufficient to pay expenses and where proper reserves could not be built up out of profits.

Among the bankers of Atlanta who have taken a leading part in measures to broaden the prosperity of Georgia are Robert F. Maddox, chairman of the board of the Atlanta & Lowry National bank and formerly president of the American Bankers' association; John K. Ottley, president of the Fourth National bank; Eugene R. Black, president of the Atlanta Trust company, and H. Lane Young, executive manager of the Citizens & Southern bank.

Successful in Georgia.

In Georgia success has crowned the efforts for diversification to such an extent that last year the state's manufactured output was more than double the value of the state's agricultural production. In that state last year more than 4,000,000 acres were planted to corn against 3,000,000 planted to cotton. This came about when farmers learned that they could raise corn as feed for cattle and then make a good profit on their dairy products. Also, in Georgia it was found that considerable areas of the land were favorable for the growth of tobacco. This appealed strongly to the Georgia farmer, tobacco being like cotton, a quick cash crop. Very large profits are now being realized by the farmers who have planted portions of their farms to tobacco.

Another field of enterprise developed successfully in Georgia is that of raising early vegetable plants for transplantation in the north. In the district near Brunswick, Ga., one firm last year shipped 10,000,000 young tomato plants to the Campbell Soup company in New Jersey. In the same district another firm shipped several thousand tons of onions and other vegetables to the same company. Farmers in other sections of Georgia discovered that conditions favored the growth of pecans. As a result productive and highly profitable pecan groves have been developed and more are being planted every year. One pecan grove, planted seven years ago by a man who was all but broke was sold within a month for $100,000 cash. Not all of those who plant pecans do that well, or even nearly that well, but virtually all of them make a profit.

Boll Weevil.

Perhaps the experience of one county in Georgia will give a clear picture of what has been happening in that state. Putnam county, up to six years ago, raised cotton and little or nothing else—certainly nothing else was produced for sale. The county went on, year after year, turning out an average of 18,000 bales of cotton annually. With cotton at or around 20 cents a pound, that represented $1,800,000 a year gross income for the farmers of the county.

Then came the boll weevil. Instead of 18,000 bales, Putnam county produced, in the worst of the boll weevil years, just 275 bales of cotton. Revenue for the farmers dropped from $1,800,000 to less than $50,000. Cotton, the farmers learned to their bitter sorrow, was no longer a "sure-profit" crop. The money they had borrowed in anticipation of their usual income stood against them as debt that must be carried over to another year. But, the boll weevil was still there, as great a menace as before. There was just one common-sense thing to do and the farmers of Putnam county did it—they did what the bankers and business men of Georgia had been begging them to do for half a century. They diversified their products. They turned to dairying, to hog raising and to the cultivation of peanuts.

Diversification.

Cotton was not abandoned entirely. A man with a farm of 50 acres planted 10, perhaps 15, acres of cotton. He gave more time to the cultivation of as one Atlanta business man expressed it, "on the fat of the land," from the profits returned to him through his diversification of land and labor.

Atlanta today is prosperous. Its position as the great banking and wholesale and distributing center for a territory equal in area to New England makes it a metropolis in the fullest sense of the word. Atlanta business men, keenly alive to the perilous position of a one-crop country, have urged and continue to urge the adoption of all sound measures for broadening the agricultural productivity of the south. They do not stop there.

For their own city, Atlantas leaders in industry give earnest support to every project for diversification of the community's manufacturing, wholesale and distributing activities. Taking the little with the big, Atlanta gives life to and derives support from more than 1,000 separate business establishments. Its factories include everything from the small clothing shop to great steel mills.

Progress in Carolinas.

In the Carolinas manufacturing, particularly the production of cotton cloths, has advanced with great strides in the last few years. Naturally, attention centers mainly on the great cotton mills that have grown up almost overnight in competition with New England mills has become more and more extensive. Other industries, however, have been developed, and farming has been diversified, notably in the growing of peanuts. Farmers have found that peanuts afford a steady market and constitute more of a "sure profit" crop than does cotton.

Construction of more and more cotton mills is hoped for in the Carolinas. Abundant power facilities, good water, a plentiful supply of labor at fair wages, and low taxation, added to proximity to the source of the raw material, are declared to be of such great assistance to manufacturers in cutting costs of production that year by year the district will become more and more the real center of cotton textile factories for the entire country.

In addition to all these advantages, business men assert that their transportation facilities in the south are now on a basis of real efficiency. The Southern, the Seaboard Air Line and the Atlantic Coast Line are praised for excellent service. In this respect there has been a great change since the railroads were taken back into private control after government operation. There was a time when the south felt it was handicapped because of superior railroad facilities in the north. Today the south believes it can ship as quickly and deliver as well as can the north.

Virginia Crops.

Virginia's conditions are similar to those in the Carolinas, except that the decline in the price of cotton has been only of minor sympathetic effect in that state. Virginia has not been a one-crop state and prosperity there has been on a steady basis.

Alabama's steel mills continue to serve as a bulwark for the prosperity of the state. Here, as in Georgia, diversification is the aim of all, business men as well as farmers.

Florida gives every appearance of rapid recovery from the conditions which ensued upon the collapse of the land speculation inflation. The citizens of the state are accomplishing this end by devoting their time to productive efforts—to raising greater quantities of citrus fruits and vegetables. Also, now that the land boom has ended, farmers of the state are able to obtain sufficient numbers of workers for the picking, packing and shipping of the state's crops.

According to investigations made by a correspondent of The Atlanta Constitution, the demand for labor, during the height of the real estate fever caused extravagant increases of wages for construction and street building work so that the farmers actually could not gather in their produce. Men who had been accustomed to $3 or $4 per day on the farms suddenly discovered that they could get from $10 to $20 a day to work for the real estate companies. "With the return of normal conditions," says the correspondent, "all this has changed and the result is shown in increased shipments of the products that have made Florida famous."

Florida Shipments.

Official figures of the United States department of agriculture show that shipments of perishable freight from Florida in the period October 1, 1926, to March 19, 1927, amounted to 44,476 carloads. This is an increase of 11,336 cars, or more than 33 per cent, compared with the shipments for the October to March season of 1925-'26.

These shipments, in the order of their relative importance, included oranges, grapefruit, celery, tomatoes, mixed citrus fruits, lettuce, cabbage, mixed vegetables, string beans and strawberries. This list indicates that Florida has solved the problem of diversification with success.

In Florida there is no desire to decry the efforts of the promoters of worthy real estate developments in the state. On the contrary, it is realized frenzied realty speculation has come to an end.

Florida Opposed Boom.

In a recent statement on real estate speculation, Colonel Peter O. Knight, of Tampa, said:

"The real estate boom was not created by Florida's citizens. They deprecated it and cautioned against it constantly. The citizens of Florida are satisfied with their state. It has the same climate, soil and geographical position it has always had and it will continue to prosper and grow in the future as it has in the past."

To sum up, it may be said that the south has refused to be dismayed by low prices for cotton, by bank failures, by the boll weevil or by the collapse of a real estate boom. The bankers, merchants and leaders of industry have reformed their lines for new campaigns designed to add to the prosperity of their great section of the country. They view the past only for the lessons that may be learned from it. One banker in Atlanta said he had no time to review 1926 because 1927 was keeping him too busy. Along that line, he said, he believed he could do the most good in helping to keep prosperity on a high level.

Some observers think they see in all this the birth of a new south. It seems more likely, though, that the will to conquer in the field of economics is rather a development of the south as it always was. The old south, the south of story and tradition still exists. It holds sway, however, in the homes and behind the scenes. In the bank, in the market place and in the factory, the men of the south are no different from men in similar positions in the north. They are just as keen, just as alert, just as energetic in pursuit of business and just as earnest in striving to serve the best interests of their communities as are any of their brethren in the north.

Boll Weevil Blessing In Disguise for South

Incentive to broaden its field of activity was given to the south by its great devastator, the boll weevil, according to Clark Howell, editor of The Atlanta Constitution. Up to the time that the insect's ravages laid waste almost the entire crop of the Georgia fields, said Mr. Howell, little progress had been made in the campaign of business men to induce farmers to diversify their crops. The difficulty was that cotton was an easy crop to grow and was always a quick-cash product.

After the boll weevil had brought many farmers face to face with ruin, however, Mr. Howell continued, there was a marked change in agricultural practices. Fearing a return of the pest, farmers turned to corn, cattle, dairy products, hogs and other products to protect themselves against loss.

In Mr. Howell's opinion, the boll weevil, destructive as he was, may now be regarded as having been a blessing in disguise for the south.

IRON PRODUCTION GAINS IN MARCH

Cleveland,, April 9.—Iron Trade Review says:

"Pig iron production in March forged ahead of February by 7 per cent, nosed out last March by not quite 1 per cent and proved the third best March in history. The daily average rate last month was 112,330 tons, compared with 105,021 tons in February, and 111,554 tons in March a year ago. The best March on record—that of 1925—attained a height of 115,207 tons. In point of total production March tonnage was 3,482,223 tons, against 3,040,604 tons in February and 3,458,172 tons in March, 1926. The month closed with 223 blast furnaces active, a net gain of 5.

"No major threat to this high rate of production has appeared. The colorless iron and steel markets of the past week are characteristic of the early days of a new quarter. The slight shrinkage in steelmaking bears out the seasonal trend of the past three years. Some March production records were made, as usual, at the expense of April specifications and the sequel is a slight easing up. Steel corporation subsidiaries are down 2 points from their recent capacity rate, and for the entire industry a steelmaking rate of 90 to 91 per cent is apt.

"At this time the bituminous coal strike is a negligible market factor. One coal-carrying road has deferred action on track material. Some eastern blast furnaces are not quoting on third-quarter business. An occasional strip order has been held up. But considering the wide sweep of the markets, there is no disturbance. The Connellsville coke region is not affected and coke daliveries are normal.

"Bids on second-quarter requirements of the Pennsylvania and New York Central railroads for bars, plates and shapes reveal mills firm at 1.90c, Pittsburgh, and 2.00c, Chicago. Sheet prices to these carriers developed a wide spread with a tendency toward weakness. Low bids to the New York Central were 2.25c, Youngstown on blue annealed, 2.75c, on black and 3.50c on galvanized. Three makers bid 2.20c, mill, for the blue annealed business of the Pennsylvania.

"Pig iron is between two buying seasons and consequently dull. Consumers generally are protected well through second quarter and producers are not aggressive, preferring to watch the progress of the coal strike.

March freight car awards, totaling 4,630, were scarcely more than half of the 89.95 placed last March. First-quarter car orders of 25,975 compare with 30,720 in the corresponding period of 1926.

"The Iron Trade Review composite of 14 leading iron and steel products this week is $36.81, compared with $36.90 one week ago and $33.48 one year ago."

SUZUKI FAILURE HITS FINANCES OF JAPAN

London, April 9.—(AP)—A Tokio dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph says that, pending successful adjustment of the affairs of Suzuki and company, the entire financial structure of Japan is plunged into uncertainty.

A meeting of the creditors of the firm has been arranged. Suzuki spokesmen continue to affirm the concern's ability to honor all outstanding obligations, provided the banks are willing to extend the period of repayment and the other creditors do not press their present claims.

While the daily newspapers continue optimistic, the dispatch adds, gloom among traders and financiers has been deepened by the closing of the 65th bank, with capital of 10,000,000 yen ($5,000,000) and deposits of 30,000,000 yen ($15,000,000). The Suzukis hold the majority of stock in this bank.

MARCH BUILDING SHOWS DECLINE

The returns of value of building permits granted in March and the first quarter at the leading cities of the country seem to point to a good-sized reduction from the life periods of a year ago. Thus, reports to Bradstreet's from 139 cities of the United States show a total value of permitted for building in March of $316,511,613, as against a total of $236,976,352 for February this year, and of $355,123,322 in March a year ago at identical cities. There is here indicated a gain of 33.6 per cent over the short month of February, but a decrease of 10.8 per cent from March a year ago, which, it might be recalled, showed a gain of 3.9 per cent over March, 1926.

The reduction, in percentage, from March a year ago, seems quite uniform as between New York and the rest of the country. Thus, New York, with a total of $96,988,650 for March, compares with a total of $108,230,224 in March, 1926, a decrease of 10.3 per cent, whereas the total for the 138 other cities is $219,522,963, as against $246,893,098 in March, 1926, a decrease of 11 per cent. Again, while 69 cities report increases over March a year ago, and only 71 declined, there are decreases enough in most leading cities to more than offset good-sized gains at a smaller number. In addition to New York, which shows a decrease, the cities of Detroit, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans and Washington report declines. In the list of increases, Chicago easily leads; in fact, the gain there is mainly responsible for the small percentage of gain shown in the central-western group, the only group gaining over March, 1926. In addition to Chicago, the cities of San Francisco, Seattle, Buffalo, Indianapolis, Columbus, Toledo, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Houston and Kansas City show notable gains.

SOUTHERN CROPS FAR ADVANCED

The 1927 agricultural production program is in fairly good balance among crops and livestock, although weather conditions will be a decisive factor, the bureau of agricultural economics says in its April 1 report, just received here.

Early crops and general field work in the south are reported as markedly advanced. Fruit is unusually advanced almost everywhere, although there is still a considerable frost hazard this month for fruit and tender truck crops.

Reports show an intention to shift acreages of crops rather than to make any substantial change in total production. Readjustment in the cotton belt is indicated by a planned increase of about 6,000,000 acres in feed and food crops.

"If conservatism is to be recommended on any part of this intended program," the bureau say, "it should probably apply at least to the cash crops, especially potatoes. The intended potato acreage, with average yields, would produce some 410,000,000 bushels which would be a sharp increase over the crops of the last two years.

"The country is going into the new season without carrying burdensome stocks. March showed that only about 14,000,000 bushels more potatoes stored than a year ago. There are around 380,000,000 bushels less of feed grains on hand than last year. Even the carryover of cotton will be much less than was thought probable a few months ago."

The tendency to expand potato acreage is reported particularly marked in the cotton belt. Increases in Virginia and in the cotton states, except Florida, and Texas, seem to be mostly outside the commercial areas.

SHRINKAGE SHOWN IN TRADE VOLUME

The dollar volume of trade for the week ending April 2, as measured by check payments, was smaller than in either the preceding week or the corresponding week of 1926, according to the weekly statement of the department of commerce. While prices showed practically no change from the previous week, but were substantially lower than in the corresponding week of the preceding year.

Loans and discounts of federal reserve member banks receded slightly from the previous week, but still well above the corresponding week of 1926. Interest rates on time money, though showing no change from the preceding week, averaged lower than a year ago. Bond prices showed gains over both the preceding week and the corresponding week of 1926. Interest rates on call loans average higher than in the preceding week but were lower than in the same week of the previous year. Prices of stocks on the New Stock Exchange, although showing no appreciable change from the preceding week, were substantially higher than in the corresponding week of the previous year.

Loans to brokers and dealers secured by stocks and bonds, made by federal reserve member banks in New York city, were larger at the end of March than at the same time a year earlier. Although the federal reserve ratio declined from the preceding week, it was considerably higher than a year ago. Bills discounted by federal reserve banks were smaller than a year ago. Bills discounted by federal reserve banks were smaller than in the preceding week or the corresponding week of 1926. Building contracts awarded during the last week of March, although smaller than during the previous week, were greater than a year ago.

Business failures were more numerous than in either the previous week or the same week of the previous year.

The production of bituminous coal during the fourth week of March was larger than in either the previous week or the same week of 1926. Lumber production was smaller than in either prior periods, while the output of petroleum, showing no change from the previous week, was substantially larger than a year ago. The production of beehive coke was smaller than in either comparative period. Distribution of goods during the fourth week of March, as seen from data on carloadings, was well above last year.

FARM WAGES STAY AT LEVEL OF 1926

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—The spring survey by the agriculture department shows that the general level of farm wages on April 1 was 166 per cent of the pre-war level and practically the same as a year ago, but that farm wages are not nearly as high as industrial wages which are about 231 per cent of the pre-war level.

High industrial wages, the department states, have apparently acted to maintain farm wages at about last year's level in the face of an increase in farm labor supply relative to demand. Practically all sections of the country reported an increase in the supply of farm labor relative to demand, the largest decreases being shown in southern states.

The farm labor supply was reported at 90.8 per cent of normal April 1, compared with 91.1 per cent March 1. this year and 89.1 per cent April 1, last year; farm labor demand, 88.6 per cent of normal compared with 87.5 and 91.0, and supply of farm labor in per cent of demand was 102.5 per cent compared with 104.1 and 98.1.

COTTON EXPORT RATE IS UPHELD

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—Cotton delivered by railroads on the wharves at the side of ships in New Orleans as well as in Texas ports should be charged an export rate 2c per hundred pounds higher than rates to the city areas back from the waterfront, it was decided today by the interstate commerce commission.

After rehearing arguments over the port rates, the commission refused to set aside its previous decision, which affected only Texas ports, and decided that the rate differential laid down should be put into effect at New Orleans as well.

It refused, however, to extend its findings to affect rates applying to Mobile, Ala., to which port the present charges were consequently left undisturbed. The present system by which railroads allow cotton compression in transit was also found reasonable.

"Upon consideration of all the facts and circumstances we are of opinion and find that for the purposes of this case, a fair and reasonable basis for equalizing the city deliver and ship side rates will be to increase the city delivery rates one cent per 100 pounds," the commission said, "and reduce the ship side rates exclusive of wharf or pier terminal charges equivalent to two cents per 100 pounds, to the basis of the increased city delivery rates.

"This basis of equalization should be applied to both the Texas and Louisiana ports except that this finding should not be construed as condemning the practice of the lines serving New Orleans of maintaining that port on a parity with Galveston and Houston."

Substantially, the commission added, the adjustment of rates ordered today was the same as that originally found advisable when the situation was investigated two years ago. At present shipside rates on cotton moving through Texas ports are three cents to three and one-half cents per 100 pounds higher than rates to the same ports for city delivery.

The complaint against the arrangement arose in the cotton trade because warehouses and cotton compress plants located actually on the waterfront attained an undue advantage from the difference in the charge.

When the alteration in Texas port rates was required, it was also found necessary to apply the ruling to New Orleans and Louisiana ports.

New York, April 9.—(By The Associated Press.)—Buoyancy of high-grade industrials and specialties gave today's stock market a firm undertone. Heavy buying orders lifted a number of so-called "rich men's stocks" to new high records despite sporadic profit-taking and bear selling in other quarters, which tended to give the market a somewhat unsettled appearance. Although there were several soft spots, th general average in the railway group reaching a new high record.

The decline of 43,979 tons in steel tonnage last month, made public after the close, caused little disappointment, inasmuch as the loss was not so great as had earlier been expected, preliminary estimates of the decrease having run as high as 200,000 tons. United States Steel common held firm around 171, where it closed for a small fractional gain on the day.

Further accumulation of General Motors carried it to a new high record at 184 1-4, while Dupont, which has large General Motors holdings, jumped 8 points to a new peak at 250 before reacting to 247 7-8. Commercial Solvents B also sold up to a new top at 319, a jump of 10 points, and there was active trading in Texas Gulf Sulphur and American Smelting common. Kelly-Springfield common and both preferred issues touched new maximum prices for the year on reports that first quarter earnings were substantially above those of the same period of last year.

New York Central continued to be an outstanding favorite in rails, touching 151 5-8, the highest in over 20 years, while Missouri-Kansas-Texas, Chesapeake & Ohio, Baltimore & Ohio, St. Louis Southwestern, Kansas City Southern and Hudson & Manhattan common and preferred sold at peak prices for the year or longer.

Weakness developed in some food and tobacco stocks, notably Ward Baking preferred and Tobacco Products, which fell to new lows for the year. Continental Baking A was also subjected to heavy selling pressure.

Establishment of a new high for the year by Greek drachmas at 1.35 cents was one of the few developments of consequence in foreign exchange. Demand sterling and French francs held fairly steady around $4.85 5-16 and 3.91 cents, respectively, while most of the other continental rates showed moderate recessions.

Georgia Poultry Industry Now In Flourishing Shape

There was a time—and that time not so far back—when the Atlanta citizen who delighted in that trusty American breakfast of ham and eggs could lay a safe wager that the latter part of this dual dish came from other states than the commonwealth of Georgia.

But so great has the poultry industry increased in this state that according to C. E. Woodall, manager of the Atlanta branch of the Tennessee Egg company, that during at least two months in the year the city of Atlanta gets practically nothing but eggs layed by Georgia hens on Georgia soil. Those two months are March and April.

When it is taken into consideration that the city of Atlanta, according to Mr. Woodall, consumes no less than five cars of eggs each week, that each car contains 400 cases, that each case holds 30 dozen and that a dozen is 12, one can grasp the startling fact that Georgia hens are both plentiful and busy during the two months mentioned. By simple arithmetic it can be seen that this city and its suburbs crack the shells of 720,000 eggs from Sunday to Sunday.

While this state, according to Mr. Woodall, will furnish practically all the eggs needed for this city during March and April. The other ten months find the various companies going out into foreign territory to meet the demand. Tennessee furnishes the bulk of this outside trade, but many other southern states as far west as Missouri and as far south as Louisiana contribute someof the product.

The Day in Finance

Discrepancy Between Actual Business Conditions and Trend of Stock Market Becomes Marked.

New York, April 9.—There is not the slightest doubt but that a study of the general financial and industrial situation as a whole leaves the impression that there is a marked discrepancy between the action of the stock market and actual conditions in business. Recent developments in real estate show plainly that conditions there are anything but satisfactory. Building continues active but not as active as it was. The automobile industry shows seasonal improvement but employment there is still far below a year ago. Price cutting in sugar and oil reflect conditions in those lines. Copper is dead. Spokesmen for the steel trade frankly admitted in this week's reviews that seasonal slowing down had begun.

Yet in the face of the foregoing all high records for the number of individual issues traded in on the stock exchange were broken this week with the average price of 50 stocks daily making a new high record for all time, with the ticker frequently far behind actual trading on the stock exchange floor.

From the weekly statements of freight car loadings, bank clearings, employment, the volume of trade being handled by the country as a whole is running very high. On the other hand the quarterly and annual reports of some industrial companies together with the very large number of commercial failures for the first three months of 1927 indicate plainly enough that competition in handling the large volume of business moving is severe and growing more so. Despite this, however, under the pressure of abundance of idle money the bond and stock markets continue active with prices advancing.

Without Precedent.

As a result of the existing discrepancy between the action of the bond and stock markets and general trade many people in and out of Wall street have developed the habit of jerking the head to one side or the other at regular intervals to see over their shoulder if anything unexpected has happened or is about to happen. The facts are that nothing exactly like the existing situation has ever before been witnessed.

To understand what is now going on in the bond and stock market and has been going on since 1921, it is necessary to keep in mind that there is far more wealth in this country today than ever before; that bonds and stocks are merely a secondary form of cash; that the income return on bonds and stocks is adjusting itself to the earning power of money in the open market. That is what bonds and stocks always have done in fluctuating up and down and always will do. In 1923 after the liquidation of frozen loans and inventories this country under the improved federal reserve system began for the first time since the war to feel the full influence of its greatly increased wealth. Before liquidation of frozen loans and inventories started in 1920 money was so tight that 8 per cent or higher was being asked for time loans with call money worth 25 per cent. The income return on United States government bonds was then as high as 6 1-2 per cent or higher with seasoned dividend paying stocks offering an income of 7, 8 or 10 per cent rates or more.

Money Abundant.

Since 1921 with money in the open market more abundant and hence interest rates lower, the price of bonds and stocks has been advancing to a level where the income return on seasoned securities was closer to the earning power of money in the open market. The earning power in the open market and the income return on stocks and bonds may be likened to water in two different tubes side by side leading in roundabout ways to a common reservoir. As water is put in or taken out of the reservoir the water in the two tubes is going to move up and down, always at the same level or trying to get at the same level.

The open market selling price of seasoned dividend paying railroad stocks was higher on the average this week than at any time since 1906 when the high record of railroad shares for all time was established. We had a money panic in this country in 1893 because credit had been used to the point where the strain was too great. The five or six years following were spent in picking up the pieces, in thawing out frozen loans and inventories, in paying off bank loans, in honest to goodness hard work by the nation as a whole. As a result we got our house in order and money began to get easier and pile up. Interest rates on time and call money dropped and the price of bonds and stocks advanced, that is the earning power of money in the open market and the income return on securities moved in common. This continued until the income return on bonds was anywhere from 4 per cent to as little as 2 and a fraction.

There is no comparison between the wealth in this country today and that existing 25 years ago. What is going on in the bond and stock market and what has been going on since 1921 is a readjustment upward of prices in an effort to make the income return on securities correspond to the earning power of money in the open market.

We had a slowing down in general trade beginning last October because a temporary readjustment was necessary. We had a decided downward price movement in the stock market last month a year ago because a temporary readjustment in that direction was necessary. We may get another temporary slowing down in general trade or a temporary setback in the stock market at any time. However, there is going to be no sustained reaction either in general trade or in the stock market until a real strain again begins to appear in credit.

We and every other nation in the world based on past performances can be counted on to overdo any movement in general trade or in the stock market either in one direction or the other. We over-did our trade and stock market booms of 25 years ago and 1907 was the result. In time in one way or another we will use up our great surplus of idle funds and again r... into a money strain. Until some strain does appear in the money market, however, indicated by sustained advancing rates for time and call loans, there is no reason to look for real trouble. In the meantime the bond and stock market continues to discount easy money.

BUTTER MARKETS ARE SENSITIVE

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—Butter markets during the week ending April 9 were in such sensitive position that only a slight disturbance was necessary to cause either a sharp advance or a rapid decline. Sentiment was in favor of lower prices as operators felt that lower prices were essential to maintain consumption at its present rate. Trading was featured with caution and advancing prices were resisted. Speculative demand on actual butter was lacking. Receivers were anxious sellers and buyers purchased only for immediate needs.

Stocks on dealers' floors at the four markets were about 40 per cent lighter than the corresponding week a year ago in spite of receipts for the week which were over 10 per cent heavier. The slightest increase in trading stocks would no more than give the market a weaker turn, when they would melt away again under an urgent demand from jobbers.

From a purely statistical standpoint, there was little cause for weakness which developed on Tuesday and Wednesday. Receipts, while slightly heavier, cleared quite rapidly and stocks on dealers' floors were considerably less than those of the corresponding period a year ago. Storage holdings on the first of the week were only slightly over one million pounds as compared with about nine million pounds on the corresponding week a year ago. Current domestic production and foreign butter must therefore supply requirements as there are practically no reserve stocks in storage. While production continues to show slight increases, there is little likelihood of any sharp increase in the "make" for the next few weeks.

Coffee.

New York, April 9.—Coffee futures opened today at a decline of 1 point to an advance of 2 points. Figures showing a decrease in stocks of coffee in the interior of Sao Paulo evidently failed to create any demand, and prices eased off to 12.85 for July under very small offerings, probably promoted by the easier Rio market. The close was 4 to 8 points net lower. Estimated sales, 7,000 bags. Closing quotations: May, 13.65; July, 12.65; September, 11.96; December, 11.59; January, 11.45; March, 11.27.

Spot, quiet: Rio 7s, 16 to 16½; Santos 4s, 17½ to 18. Cost and freight offers included Santos 4s at 16.25 to 16.60.

Rio exchange on London and dollar buying rate unchanged. Rio market 50 to 250 reis lower; Santos, unchanged. Brazilian port receipts, 38,000. Jundiahy receipts, 7,000.

Stock Letters.

FENNER & BEANE.

New York, April 9.—Trading in today's market proceeded in heaviest volume of any week-end session thus far in 1927, the total for the two-hour session being around 1,250,000. Vigorous advances on huge transactions went ahead in many sections of the list. At the same time heavy selling took place in individual stocks and special groups. Tobacco Products broke to new low ground for the year at 96½ and Continental Can at 58½. Both stocks were weak on question of permanence of their present dividend rates. Oils were subjected to renewed pressure following their recent rally on short covering. Phillips broke to 46½ and Marland to 46½ and Pan-Am "B" to 38½. Continued price cutting of crude oil is affecting oil earnings materially. One of the first quarterly reports issued was by the Union Oil Company of California, showing 68 cents a share against dividend requirements of 50 cents a share for the quarter. Market is still full of cross currents and great care should be exercised in making new commitments.

Cotton Letters.

HUBBARD BROS. & CO.

New York, April 9.—Heavy rains over the belt, with the exception of west Texas, caused our market to remain steady. However, the market is so narrow that these rains did not cause any undue activity, but toward the close it was noticeable that there was some week-end covering on these rains. The forecast still predicts unsettled weather. Should these rains continue, undoubtedly it will have a decided effect on the market eventually, as they are delaying preparations and causing the Mississippi and its tributaries to reach a dangerous high water mark which could easily cause the rivers to overflow in some low lands that should at this time prepare for cotton planting.

The trade still is reluctant to enter the market on any upturn and seems satisfied to wait further developments from the new crop. This crop weather over the belt, with mild temperatures, will also be conducive to the spread of boll weevil.

Liverpool futures are due Monday: May 7.37; July 7.70.

The Friends Of Israel.

There has been an awakened consciousness among Christian people of a responsibility to make their Christ known, in all His beauty, to the Jew.

St. Paul, in writing to the Church at Rome, set forth the order for giving the Gospel message when he said: "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

Too long has the imperative, "To the Jew first!" been neglected by the Christian church. But inasmuch as the rabbis are themselves urging a better understanding between Jews and Christians, the latter can no longer afford to be somnolent or to turn a deaf ear.

Among the overtures that are being made for a better understanding, one of recent date came from a Jewish pulpit in Albany, New York. Rabbi Ranson, according to news dispatches, made a sincere and fervent plea for more friendly relations, also suggesting that the Jewish people introduce into their prayer book the new spirit of a better understanding between Jew and Christian.

In Atlanta there has long been the evidence of such a spirit, the growth of which goes steadily forward. For the past six months this has taken visible form in an organization called "The Friends of Israel Prayer Circle," which, under the leadership of Dr. Manget, is making itself felt in the prayer life of the community.

With an attendance of never less than sixty-five or seventy people from the various evangelical churches, this prayer circle meets every second Thursday of the month at 3 o'clock in Wesley Memorial church. The president of this organization is Dr. J. D. Manget; first vice president, Dr. Marion McH. Hull; second vice president, Mrs. Harry Etheridge; secretary, Mrs. Frank Woodruff, and treasurer, Mrs. Ralph J. Sauls. Mr. Jacob Gartenhaus, Jewish missionary, is the earnest and capable director.

May it enter into every Christian heart to pray that the Jew may recognize in the Christian's Savior, his own long expected Messiah.

Letter From Missionary In China Is of Interest

It will be of interest to friends of Miss Catherine Bryan, of foreign mission board of S. B. C. missionary and kindergarten teacher, located at Shanghai, China, to have news of her through a letter recently received in Atlanta by Mrs. George Westmoreland.

Although Miss Bryan has for many years been adopted by the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist W. M. S. as their special missionary, and is greatly beloved by her own church, she is also a favorite among Georgia Baptist women throughout the state. Mrs. Westmoreland received the letter from Miss Bryan March 28, and has kindly given for publication the following extract in which some present conditions in China are narrated.

Miss Bryan writes: "You have no doubt already heard of the 'big strike' which shut up the post office like a box, and none of us could send or receive mail. Since that time, matters have grown worse and we are now faced with 'evacuation' at any moment. I have had my suitcase packed for three days to leave at a moment's notice. The Cantonese or nationalist party are approaching us from the south (Ningpo and Hangchow). The former bandit, now Marshal Chang Tso-lin, came down from Nanking last night in company with Sun-chian Fang, the tupen of this province, and both factions are eyeing each other angrily. We foreigners lie between the two grindstones, should blows commence in our vicinity. It has been decided by the American defense committee that all women and children on this campus are to go (upon notification from the city) by motor bike to Shanghai electric power plant grounds. I am to take 11 of them up in 'the pacer.' I shall probably have to run the gauntlet three times since each woman and child must have at least one suitcase.

"I have a small, much-worn American flag to stick up over my radiators which may help me out some. I am trying now to get a trunk packed to store in the concession, lest we have to be away for a lengthy period. I am packing it to take to the United States if worse comes to worst. It's just heartbreaking to give your life to something and to have it end this way. But, as I say over and over to myself, 'It's all His work and I am ready for His will to be enacted for it and for me, His child.'

"Pray for me as I try to redouble my efforts to do His will and to finish His work."

Baptist Convention In Louisville

Baptist women of Georgia are eager to know at the first possible date something of the arrangements made by Mrs. A. F. McMahon, corresponding secretary-treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Union of Georgia, for the delegation going from Atlanta and other points leaving from Atlanta for Louisville, Ky., to attend meetings of the Southern Baptist convention May 2-7. It is announced through Mrs. McMahon, that the Louisville & Nashville railroad has been chosen as the official route and special sleepers will leave Atlanta at 6:35 p. m. Sunday, May 1, reaching Louisville at an early hour on Monday morning. Delegates and visitors desiring to go together on the same train, are requested to write Mrs. A. F. McMahon, Palmer building, Atlanta, and make sleeping car reservations.

Miss Clara Stephenson Writes Excellent Report.

Miss Clara Stephenson, press chairman for Atlanta Baptist W. M. U., wrote an excellent report of the annual meeting held Tuesday, March 29, at Third Baptist church. An unfortunate delay in the mail caused the report to reach the state editor too late for last Sunday's page. Extracts from Miss Stephenson's report will be read with interest.

Official reports received at the annual meeting were made by Mrs. George Niles, treasurer, Mrs. J. W. Awtrey, treasurer of good will centers; Mrs. J. H. Jeffries, recording secretary; Mrs. A. G. Arnold, corresponding secretary, and the eighth district secretaries, Mrs. L. D. Burge, Mrs. L. C. Craig, Mrs. J. W. Smith, Mrs. W. H. S. Dorsey, Mrs. A. G. Sullivan, Mrs. S. P. Paschal and Mrs. G. S. Coates.

Mrs. Weston Bruner led the devotional period and reports were received from Mrs. J. D. Rhodes, Mrs. Frances Brown Chase, Mrs. George Westmoreland, Mrs. E. S. Caldwell, Mrs. J. H. Zachry and Miss Clara Stephenson, on their respective work.

Miss Arendall, of the Andrew and Frances good will center, and Miss Ruby Hill, of the Kate Dawson good will center spoke of their work.

Mrs. Phoebe Lewis Writes Article of Unusual Interest

Mrs. Phoebe M. Lewis, 84 years old and beloved pioneer of this city, has written the following article which is of wide interest:

"Wednesday afternoon, March 30, the women's council of the First Christian church, Atlanta, out of the loving kindness of their hearts, staged a most unique and enjoyable surprise to the delight and pleasure of some of the 'younger' members of our church whose birthdays occurred on or near that date: namely, Alexander Campbell Bruce, Mrs. Phoebe M. Lewis, Mrs. Kate Logue, Mrs. Nannie Morton, Mrs. Sarah Anna Moore, Mrs. Jane Victoria Fitzgibbon, Mrs. Mary Vashti Williams, Dr. Elzie B. Thomas and Mrs. Cora Stauffer. Of course the last two, being a little more mature, could not exactly be classed with the others, but as their birthdays occurred near the same time they were admitted to the charmed circle.

"After a brief business session Brother Stauffer opened the program with an interesting talk on the easy (?) life of the missionary, followed by Miss Ada Evelyn Lewis, who gave several enjoyable readings. Mrs. Downey then talked on missions and told the pretty story of the doll festival in Japan. Mrs. Logue, a young lady of 81, rendered an exquisite piano solo which so charmed the audience she was obliged to respond to an encore and was then presented with a beautiful Easter lily.

"At this point a table containing an enormous birthday cake was brought out before the eager eyes of the young people. Leading from the base of the cake were little ribbons tied to candlesticks made of candy, each holding a tiny candle with a name attached. Mr. Bruce was the first name called and the audience demanded a speech, but—

'You'd scarce expect one of his age
To speak in public on the stage.'

—a mere lad of 92. However, he responded, and covered himself with glory. Then followed several of the young sisters ranging in age from 85 to 75. The candles were lighted reminding them to let their light shine and to keep their lamps trimmed and burning. Each one drew a candle and at the end of the ribbon was a tiny image supposed to be a facsimile of the one who drew it. The sculptor was surely an artist.

"But easily the gem of the afternoon was the poem written by Mrs. Anthony. She being too modest to read it, Mrs. Harlan was glad and felt honored to do so. The poem told in pretty rhyme where and when each of these young people first saw the light of day. It was received with such enthusiasm the author was finally obliged to come forward and make her bow. Refreshments followed and then home—with hearts full of joy and peace and a deeper realization that love is the greatest thing in the world. And, according to prophecy, they lived happily ever after.

"MRS PHOEBE M. LEWIS,
First Christian Church."

Bishop Mikell's Lecture Changed

Next week Bishop Mikell's lecture on the women of the Bible will be given Wednesday, April 13, at 10:30 o'clock in All Saints church, instead of Friday. Thursday will be the observance of "Good Friday" by appropriate services in Episcopal churches throughout the city.

Trinity Business Women Will Give Reception.

The Business Woman's circle of the Trinity Methodist church will be hostess at an informal reception to members of other business woman's circles in the Methodist churches of the two Atlanta districts Monday evening April 11, from 8 to 10 o'clock in the Sunday school room. Honor guests are officers of the North Georgia Conference Woman's Missionary society of the M. E. church, south.

There are 20 circles of business women in the city and these have federated into the Methodist business woman's council, which meets once every three months. The membership of the groups has reached the 700 mark. Miss Mary Pool, a member and former president of the Trinity circle, is president of the new organization and, on that account, it is quite appropriate that the first mass meeting ever held in the city for Methodist business women be held in Trinity. Mrs. Josephine Burns Bridwell, the present chairman of the Trinity circle, will be official hostess and she will be assisted in entertaining by Mrs. John A. Manget, president, and Mrs. Wylie Young, vice president of the auxiliary.

The purpose of the meeting is that women may become acquainted with other women engaged in the same work and with the officers who are in charge of the work in this conference. Each circle from the other churches is asked to have its members wear a badge showing the name of the church which they represent.

Mission Study Class Formed at Trinity.

Trying a new plan for holding a mission study class, the women of the Trinity Methodist Missionary society enjoyed a spend-the-day meeting at the church Monday. Mrs. Newton Craig, superintendent of Bible and mission study, presided and chapters of the book, "Moslem Women," were presented by members of the circles, each circle being responsible for the presentation of one chapter. Fifteen members had part in the program.

An interesting feature of the program was the native dress of the Hindu woman, worn by Mrs. Jack Hinshaw, which has been brought from India only recently by Miss Vera Milner, who spent last year teaching in a mission school there. Other souvenirs of Miss Milner's visit were used to bring the touch of the Moslem lands to the study.

Immediately after the close of the study class the business meeting was held, presided over by Mrs. John A. Manget, president. Circle reports showed increase in members and finances for the first quarter. Mrs. Charles Johnson was elected delegate to the South Atlanta district meeting to be held at Martha Brown Memorial church on the 19th. Mrs. J. H. Beckham is the alternate.

Pan-Hellenic Tea To Be Given April 19.

A Pan-Hellenic meeting will be held Thursday, April 19, at 3 o'clock at the Atlanta Athletic club. Reservations may be made through Mrs. John W. Turner, Hemlock 2436, or Mrs. Charles Broward, Hemlock 1626-W.

Call To Prayer For China

The Methodist Episcopal church, south, is requested to join with other churches in observing Wednesday, April 13, as the day for special prayer for China.

All of our people are urged to observe this day. In family devotions, in the Wednesday night prayer services and wherever possible in special prayer groups, let supplication be made.

1. That God will bring out of the present chaos a stable government for China.

2. That as a nation we may think of the good of China as well as our own in every official act.

3. That our missionaries may have special wisdom at this critical time and that they may witness to the true spirit of Jesus in their contacts with Chinese people.

4. That God may give the native Christians grace and power in this time of terrible testing.

Jewels Class Presents Playlet at School.

The officers of the Missionary Society of St. Paul's church met in executive session Tuesday, March 28, with Mrs. W. L. Ballenger in the chair, the meeting opened with a song and Mrs. Hunter offered the prayer. "Standard of Excellence" was read by Mrs. Ballenger, and the problems of the officers were discussed. The committees were urged to hold meetings with chairmen and formulate plans for the advancement of the work. Mrs. T. P. White, vice president and general chairman of all the circles held a discussion with her committees to plans for her department. Lunch was served at 1 o'clock. The afternoon session was given over to Mrs. Andrews, chairman of the social service committee. Rev. B. F. Fraser, pastor of the church, led the opening prayer and made a most helpful talk. Mrs. W. C. McDonald also gave a most helpful and interesting talk.

"The jewels class" of Park St. Methodist church presented a play Saturday at Joel Chandler Harris school. This is the largest girls' class in the Sunday school and the musical production revealed talent and adaptability on the part of these young folks. The play was coached by Mrs. Edward Smearing, who has been studying drama in New York and displayed wonderful talent in staging, directing and also acting in the play. Miss Mary Buttrick and Mrs. Margaret Tillmann Douglass delighted the audience with their solo work, while Bill Tumlin and Bill Word furnished the necessary masculine background. Miss Jim Tillman was inimitable as an up-to-date flapper, while Miss Leila Collins as a spinster engaged over fifteen summers brought down the house.

The chorus included Brownie Merritt, Mary Joe Florrid, Hester Hyatt, Inez Crawford, mily Stallings, Ruth Hill, Eleanor Myers, Frances Crawford, Hilda Gumm, Inez Murphy, Pauline Perry, Edna Weems, Elizabeth Ramey, Clyde Malier, Katherine Malier, Evelyn Kitchens, Dorothy Walker, Sue Middlebrooks, Mrs. Charles Douglas and Mac. Burns, Jr. More than $200 was realized and it is quite likely that it will be repeated.

Inman Park Baptist Women Study Bible.

The women of Inman Park Baptist church have been studying this year the minor prophets. These Bible study meetings are always held at the church on the second Monday of each month. Miss Julia Killian is teacher. She has given much time and prayer to the study of the minor prophets and the lessons are interesting and instructive.

Recently we have resumed our study of missions. Each Tuesday morning at 9:30 o'clock our women meet at the church for one hour of prayer followed by an hour of mission study. We are studying at present Dr. Love's book, "Today's Supreme Challenge to America." Mrs. Paul Etheridge, who is known by all Atlanta Baptists, is our able teacher. Those who are interested in missions would be greatly helped by attending these classes each Tuesday morning.

MRS. S. A. COWAN.

Tables were reserved for the Junior Business Women's Bible class, of the Second Baptist church, Mrs. John S. Spalding, teacher, and the Y. W. C. A., Mrs. Fred W. Patterson, leader, at the church dinner Wednesday evening. An unusually large crowd gathered and enjoyed the delicious menu prepared by the hostess, Mrs. Robert E. Harvey, on beautifully decorated tables resembling in arrangement the familiar picture of "The Last Supper." Mrs. John R. Dickey and Mrs. T. H. Jeffries will be hostesses next Wednesday evening.

The dinner was followed by a helpful study in the Book of Acts, led by the pastor, Dr. Carter Helm Jones. The day of "the sweet girl graduate" is close at hand, and many of the girls and boys, too, both in and out of the state of Georgia, will have the privilege of listening to commencement sermons by the pastor of the old and famous Second Baptist church. Dr. Jones is loved and admired by the young people, particularly of this and adjoining states.

Mrs. Samuel Lumpkin, teacher of the women's Bible class, entertains the members next Wednesday evening at the church. Mrs. Lumpkin is a wonderful teacher and is doing splendid work in this line of service. The Business Women's league, of which Mrs. F. J. Paxon is president, met Sunday afternoon, Colonel Stiles Hopkins being the principal speaker. Circle F, Miss Mary Yancey, chairman, and Miss Pearl Moore, co-chairman, had charge.

The twilight service today, which begins at 5 o'clock and closes promptly at 6 o'clock, will be broadcast over WSB. There will be special music, and the subject of the pastor's sermon will be "The Day That Changed the World."

Mrs. Woodruff Names All Saints' Delegates To Convention

At the meeting of All Saints' church branch of the Woman's auxiliary last Monday afternoon, Mrs. Henry W. Davis, diocesan president, spoke about the division convention which is to be held in St. James' church, Cedartown, April 11, at which representatives from the various women's organizations of the Atlanta diocese will be in attendance.

Mrs. Frank Woodruff, president of All Saints' auxiliary, appointed the following representatives to the convention: Miss Bessie Lambert and Mrs. Dunbar Roy, delegates; Mrs. Robert C. Alston and Mrs. Rupert S. Horton, alternates.

Mrs. M. C. Adams, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who is visiting Mrs. Ralph Black, was introduced to the assemblage as one who had served under the national board of the Episcopal church. Mrs. Adams spoke interestingly of different phases of work that is carried on under direction of the church's mission house in New York, and concluded with concrete illustrations of work effectively done in China.

Mrs. Virlyn Moore calls attention to a change in the date of the district meeting of North Atlanta Missionary societies. Auxiliaries are requested to please not allow the regular monthly meetings on Monday, May 16, to interfere with their attendance at the district meeting.

The illness of Mrs. Jewel Tillman Burns is deeply regretted. Mrs. Burns has been assisting her father, Rev. Charlie Tillman, in a meeting in Florida and was taken ill immediately upon her return home. She is missed in her Sunday school class, choir and missionary society.

Miss Mattie Timmons, formerly of Temple and Rome, Ga., has moved to Atlanta and is making her home with her sister, Mrs. Crawford, at 438 West Ontario, in West End. She is known and loved by hundreds of Methodist women in north Georgia for her zeal in the work of the W. M. S. of the conference.

Park Street Church Holds Revival Services.

The revival services at Park Street church, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Marvin Franklin, are being attended by large audiences, a feature of the revival being a series of prayer meetings and cottage prayer meetings held the week preceding the revival, and the evening prayer services held from 7 to 7:30 o'clock each evening before the services.

Circle chairmen held a cottage prayer meeting on an afternoon of the week before the revival. The Sunday school organization, Woman's Missionary society and the Epworth leagues are each holding a prayer service each evening from 7 to 7:30 o'clock.

Mr. Eden and sister, Mrs. Spinks, consecrated revival singers, add greatly to the searching and convicting sermons. Great good is being accomplished and wonderful results are expected to follow. The services will continue another week.

Bishop Mikell Lectures On Women of the Bible

Salome.

In his fourth lecture, Bishop Mikell drew the attention of his hearers to an early morning scene on the Lake of Galilee. Here near the town of Capernaum was gathered many fishing boats, as this industy occupied the attention of men in all grades throughout the province of Galilee.

From such a group Jesus had chosen His first disciples, Andrew and his brother, Simon Peter, telling them that if they would follow Him, He would make them fishers of men. As He walked farther along the lakeside, He saw James and John in a boat with their father, Zebedu, all of whom were engaged in mending their nets. At the Savior's call, the two brothers followed Him without hesitation, leaving their father alone in the boat with the hired servants.

Salome, the mother of James and John, is twice referred to merely as the mother of Zebedu's children, while the sons themselves are identified as the sons of Zebedu, hence it may be easily conjectured that this husband and father was a person of no little consequence in the life of his day.

Both of his sons leave at once to follow the Christ, and later his wife, Salome, joined the little company of women who ministered of their substance to the needs the Savior and His disciples. It is to be inferred, however, that before Salome left her home to unite with these women, Zebedu must have died. Among these devoted followers of Jesus throughout His Galilean ministry and who also went with Him in His last journey to Jerusalem, then on to Calvary, were Mary Magdalene, Mary, the mother of James the less, Joanna, the wife of Herod's steward, Susannah and Salome.

Following the declaration of our Lord to His apostles that in the "regeneration," the should sit upon 12 thrones judging the 12 tribes of Israel, this loving, but over-ambitious mother of James and John, besought Jesus that one of her sons might sit on His right hand and the other on His left when He should come into His kingdom. Jesus answered: "Ye know not what ye ask. Are you able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" Whereupon the two sons spoke up, saying: "We are able." But the Savior replied that those two places were going to be saved for those who should be the choice of His Father.

Always, however, James and John occupied places very close and dear to the Savior. John, known as the "Beloved Disciple," is depicted as leaning on His breast, while in death St. James becomes the first martyr. St. John lived for many years after all the other apostles met their death. One tradition is that he was put into a vessel of burning oil, but came out unhurt, while another affirms that poison was put in the cup from which he drank but came out as a serpent. The real truth seems to be, however, that he became the bishop of Ephesus and was the teacher of Polycarp, giving in unbroken line the teachings of Jesus Christ.

As the body of our Savior hung upon the cross, His thought was for His mother, whom He gave into the tender care of His beloved disciple John, the son of Salome. She, with others in that loyal band of women who had followed Him since the days of His ministry in Galilee, saw the crucifixion and it was Salome who also helped to prepare the spices for his burial.

With Mary Magdalene and Mary, the wife of Cleophas, Salome went in the early dawn to the tomb to see if the huge stone still stopped the mouth of the sepulcher and to Salome as to the two Marys was the angelic message given: "Go quickly and tell His disciples that He is risen from the dead!"

Georgia Baptist W. M. U. Board Meets at Headquarters

At the board meeting of the state B. W. M. U. held at Baptist headquarte. April 5 reports showed that Georgia is leading in the number of schools of missions. Miss Julia Allen, young people's leader, taught in two of these schools during the past month, one at Bainbridge and one at Madison. A large increase in mission study credits was also recorded as a result of the school of missions, and the study of Dr. Alldredge's book, "A New Challenge to Home Missions."

The report of the corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. F. McMahon, showed an increase of mission receipts in March, 1927, over March, 1926.

Mrs. Ben S. Thompson, vice president of the east central division, reported the work in her division on a better basis, and the women more interested than ever before. Messages were read from Mrs. G. S. Borders, vice president of the northwest division; Mrs. W. C. Tribble, of the northeast division, and Mrs. C. F. Cater, of the southwest division.

The white cross chairman, Mrs. J. B. Smith, reported that the wire screening furnished by the W. M. U. of the Atlanta association had been sent to the hospital at Hwang Hsien, China. Splendid work has been done by Mrs. W. W. Stark, of Commerce, stewardship chairman, and many cards and leaflets have been distributed all over the state.

Increased interest was shown in the "Systematic Bible Readers' Course" and orders for book-marks have been received from far-away China. The report of rural field worker, Miss Ida Rhoad, showed many new societies organized.

An interesting item in the month's work was the visit of Mrs. W. J. Neel, president of the Georgi. B. W. M. U., to the Mary P. Willingham school to present the rings to the graduating class of girls. The rings were each hidden in the heart of a "Marechal Niel" rose and the presentation speech was made by the president.

Letters were read from Mrs. Laura Lee Munger, missionary in the Philippines, and Miss Catharine Bryan, kindergartner in Shanghai Baptist college.

Baptist women have been asked to pray for the Cuban W. M. U. convention, which convenes April 9. Mrs. E. K. Overstreet, of Sylvania, is attending this convention.

Notice was given of the state convention to be held at Bessie Tift college, Forsyth, Ga., June 7 and 8.

Officers present were Mrs. W. J. Neel, president, Cartersville; Mrs. J. C. Lanier, vice president, We Point; Mrs. Ben S. Thompson, division vice president, Madison; Mrs. A. F. McMahon, corresponding secretary; Miss Julia Allen, young people's leader, and Miss Ida Rhoad, rural field worker. Local board members present were: Mrs. I. B. Smith, Mrs. S. L. Taylor, Mrs. A. L. Cummings, Mrs. J. L. Phippin, Jr., Mrs. Paul S. Etheridge, Mrs. John T. Thompson, Mrs. George Westmoreland, Mrs. B. L. Bugg, Mrs. A. G. Sullivan, Mrs. E. C. Laird.

The next meeting of the board will not be held on the first Tuesday because of the Southern Baptist convention meeting in Louisville. Notice will be sent from the office at the time of meeting.

Lakewood Baptists Observe Prayer Week.

The week of prayer for home missions was observed by the Lakewood Baptist W. M. S. with the circle chairmen, Mrs. O'Farrell and Mrs. Hartsfield in charge of the program. Mrs. James Murray, mission study chairman, invited Mrs. F. G. Chandler to teach the W. M. U. manuel.

The monthly cottage prayer meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Braswell on Lakewood avenue, with Mrs. Haynes in charge. At the business meeting of the W. M. S. held during the month of March the reports of all chairmen showed for better service as the keynote. The president, Mrs. Fred Edwards, thanked the ladies for cooperating in the making of 150 napkins, sent to the Orphans' home at Hapeville. The ladies are planning the improvement of the church grounds and have pledged aid in the work.

The next meeting will be held with Mrs. W. B. Buckner on Adair avenue.

College Park Music Club Has Program.

With the coming of grand opera special interest was manifested in the presentation of the annual musical program of the College Park Music club, which was the feature of the meeting last Wednesday, at the home of the president, Mrs. Oscar Palmour.

Many reports of interest were read. The report of the building committee was to the effect that bids are now being received and it is hoped work can begin on the new clubhouse the first of May. It was also announced that College Park will take part in the better homes week, the first of May, combining that with the regular child welfare program. Mrs. W. W. Bateman the chairman of music presented the musical program. She is one of the musical leaders, not only in the city but in the state, the chorus of the College Park Music club, of which she is director, having won the pennant for the prize choral club at the recent state convention.

Miss Ruth Dabney Smith was the guest artist for the afternoon, and her numbers were enthusiastically received. She played first Prelude and "Allegro," by Pugnani, arranged by Kreisler, and later "Reverie," by Vieuxtemp; "Fairy Sailing," Burleigh, and as an encore a Brahms waltz. Although very young, Miss Smith has won over all contestants in practically every contest she ever entered. She is a scolarship pupil of Leopold Auer and has studied locally under Mr. George Lindner. Mrs. Julius De Give accompanied her.

Mrs. J. Crowder Hale sang the well-loved aria from "Madame Butterfly," "One Fine Day." Mrs. Hale possesses a voice of splendid singing quality and gave a most pleasing interpretation of this number. Her other number was the little English song, "A Brown Bird Singing," by Haydn Wood. Mrs. Harry McCowen was at the piano.

Following the program tea was served by Mrs. C. W. Evarts, assisted by three members of the younger set, Misses Kitty and Laura Vance and Miss Margaret Martin.

Meeting of Peachtree Hills Woman's Club.

The Peachtree Hills Woman's club met Wednesday at 3 o'clock at the home of Mrs. G. B. Emerson, 36 Peachtree Hills avenue, with a large number of members present.

A social hour was enjoyed at the conclusion of the meeting, at which time the hostess served tea.

The club will meet Wednesday at 3 o'clock, April 20, with Mrs. R. W. Flournoy, 137 Peachtree Hills avenue.

Why Fat Is Being Fought

Largely because of short skirts. But more because a slender figure suggests health and youth and vitality.

Courtesy Resolutions Framed For Council by Mrs. Williams

Upon Mrs. Homer Williams, of Thomasville, formerly Miss Jennie Armstrong, of Atlanta, fell the responsibility of framing the courtesy resolutions at the second biennial council in Albany, and so masterfully and constructively did she execute her charge, that the resolutions are herewith presented on the club page so that Georgia clubwomen may have the advantage and pleasure of recognizing and appreciating the brilliant framing of Mrs. Williams' resolutions. She says:

"In February, last, when Mrs. J. M. Patterson and Mrs. H. H. Perry, representing the Albany Woman's club, appeared before the executive board of the state federation to outline the plans, Albany was making for this council meeting. All of us who were present discerned a ring of sincere and cordial enthusiasm in their words. They made us feel that Albany meant to make a thorough job of her big undertaking. And, Albany has done exactly that. The big-hearted, open-handed, finely cooperative way in which she has played host has been quite splendid. Albany has placed herself in a vivid way upon the map of our consciousness. We heard her representatives forecast our welcome, but we did not dream of so sumptuous a type of hospitality as we have found. We knew we had been invited to what is commonly called a good town, but we have found ourselves in an alert and delightful young metropolis. We had heard that Albany was up and coming, but we find that she has arrived. We had been told of her wide-awake men and women, her commercial bodies, and we find them not only well abreast of the time but in many ways ahead. We had been informed that there was a suitable house for our meetings, but we find opened to us this auditorium of ample proportions and complete equipment. In every way, at every turn, our anticipations have been exceeded.

"Madame President and Members of the Council: I beg to offer the following resolution: 'Whereas, the second biennial council of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs has been entertained by the Albany Woman's club, as chief hostess, with the generous cooperation of the city, the press, the civic, social and patriotic organizations and the citizens generally; and whereas, the nature of this entertainment has contributed very greatly to the physical comfort, the working efficiency and the social enjoyment of the council members and visitors; there be it

Sincere Gratitude.

"'Resolved, That our most sincere gratitude be and is hereby expressed to each organization and each individual who has had a part in making our council meeting so delightful a success. We mention especially the Albany Woman's club, with its very efficient and gracious president, Mrs. J. M. Patterson, who has worked untiringly at her big task with vision, forethought and tactful intelligence, and has, with the loyal and devoted cooperation of her club members, her 28 local committees and Mrs. H. H. Perry as general chairman of arrangements, made the second biennial council meeting one which we shall always remember with pleasure and satisfaction because of Albany's remarkable hospitality. We mention the Albany Herald, its editors and news gatherers, who have given such generous and intelligent cooperation, not only before our meeting but during its progress. This publicity has been most effective and helpful.

"'We mention also the city commissioners for the use of this auditorium; the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions, Pilot and A. B. C. clubs, the Business and Professional Women's club, the Kinchafoonee Country club, the Richard Dale and Thronateeska chapters of the D. A. R., the U. D. C. chapter and the auxiliary of the American Legion for their exceedingly delightful entertainment and many courtesies; the Eastern Star women for good service, the hostesses who have so graciously opened their handssome homes for social gatherings in our honor, the hotels for their good service and the kindly cooperation which has meant so much to us of comfort and convenience, the musicians, especially the Council Quartette, which has enriched our programs with its delightful numbers; Mayor Kalmon and every participant in the picturesque and charming pageant of welcome, the management of Skywater Park for the privilege of viewing their amazingly beautiful property, our efficient and useful pages the Lincoln agency, Banks W. Haley, manager, for the use of a handsome Lincoln car, driven by an expert chauffeur, Felton Owens; every citizen of Albany, official or private, who has in any way contributed to the success of our meeting and we cannot fail to mention the inspiration which has been brought to every member and guest of this council by the Albany spirit. It has been worth coming for this alone. We want you Albany people to know that word of your courage, your enthusiasm, your spirit of pull-together, is going to be carried home by every woman of this council, and that only kind words can be spoken of you and your contribution to the Georgia federation. If this be a feather in your cap, wear it proudly, and long may it wave. And be it further

Mrs. Sherman's Presence.

"'Resolved, that we record our very great appreciation of the present of our general federation president, Mrs. John D. Sherman, whose fine common sense, wise words and good counsel will surely bear fruit in a more thorough understanding of our obligations as club women and in an increased devotion to the work committed to our hands. We record also our gratitude to our own most capable and respected president, Mrs. A. P. Brantley, whose firmness and good judgment, coupled with her fine spirit of service and her keen sense of the fitness of things make her an ideal leader.

"'The warm-hearted, whole-souled Irish, when they wish to express an unusual degree of appreciation, say this: 'God bless ye, and that's better than twice thank ye.'' So say we to you all who so richly deserve our gratitude, 'God bless you, and that's better than twice thank you.'"

Appreciation Of Mrs. C. H. Kittrell By Mrs. Lawson

Announcement of the death of Mrs. Leila Brinson Kittrell (Mrs. C. H.), of Dublin, Ga., former president of the Twelfth District Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, was received with genuine and universal regret by scores of clubwomen, not only in her home and district, but throughout the state. For six years she was head of the twelfth district and during that time she gave of her time and strength. She was one of the first women in Dublin to become interested in woman's participation in an organized way, in steps for the betterment of educational, health and civic conditions generally.

Mrs. Kittrell was organizer and charter member of the Laurens School club. She was president and charter member of the Laurens club and the efficient chairman of Associated Charities in her county. Women from all over the district came to her for counsel as to the prosecution of their club work.

It was the worthwhile things that occupied her thoughts day by day. The school at Tallulah Falls was always a great pride to her and she wished that each individual clubwoman in the district should know and love it as she did. If one asked Mrs Kittrell the secret of her bright, happy face, why she was always so patient, never irritated, always eager to believe the best in everyone, always happy and loving, her answer would be, "Looking ahead."

It was a pleasure to work with and under Mrs. Kittrell, and in the passing of this splendid clubwoman the women of the twelfth district feel a great loss. They will miss her in person at their club meetings, for in this work she has built herself a lasting monument. For—

"To love God, to benefit mankind,
To serve with lowly gifts the little needs
Of the poor race for which God-man died,
And do it all for LOVE"

—was the mission of her life.

Twelfth District Executive Board Met in Vidalia

The Bronte Study club, of Vidalia, was hostess to the Twelfth district executive board which met at the First Baptist church March 17. Mrs. J. C. Meadows, district president, presiding.

The district roll call showed all clubs represented except two. Mrs. J. C. Meadows, president, introduced the visitors, among whom were past presidents of the district, Mrs. Charles Sheldon, of Abbeville and Mrs. C. N. Ryals, of McRae.

Constructive Work.

Plans and suggestions for constructive work in the district were offered by Mrs. J. H. Girardeau of the McRae City Improvement club. Mrs. Meadows, Vidalia Bronte Study club; Mrs. Mullis, Cochran Woman club; Mrs. Warthen, Vidalia Woman club; and Mrs. J. W. Dougherty, Abbeville Woman's club.

Mrs. Hal Macon of the Better Films committee urged weekly matinees for the children. Mrs. T. R. Lee, chairman of better relations with service men, was absent and her paper was read by Mrs. Warthen. Mrs. Folsom, of McRae, of the educational department, was present. Mrs. Johnson, of Abbeville, gave a talk on the Division of Art; Mrs. C. D. Williams, of Vidalia, representing the department of health, asked that clubs observe health day. Mrs. D. C. Patillo chairman of legislation, being absent, her report was given by Mrs. John Poe. The better homes chairman, Mrs. J. E. Thompson, gave plans for observing "Better Homes Week." Mrs. Ethel Bomar Giles presented a number of her pupils in piano solos, during both sessions. A touching memorial service was held for the late Mrs. C. H. Kittrell, a beloved past president.

Luncheon was served by members of the Bronte Study club in the basement of the church. During luncheon Mrs. T. J. Ainsworth and Mrs. Giles were presented. Mrs. Ainsworth spoke on the merits of national music week and Mrs. Giles on "What Clubs Can Do for Music. Miss Mary Thomas rendered vocal solos accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Giles.

The afternoon session assumed the form of an institute and was well attended. Club ethics was discussed in a brilliant paper by Mrs. Girardeau, of McRae, and a comprehensive scope of rural clubs was outlined by Mrs. Mullis, of Cochran. Mrs. O. D. Warthen conducted a round table discussion to which many enthusiastic responses were made.

Convention in Dublin.

Mrs. Meadows read an invitation from Mrs. Frank Lawson inviting the annual district convention to meet in Dublin the second week in May, at which the state president, Mrs. A. P. Brantley, and other members of the state board will be present.

The American Home And Standards To Feature Biennial

The American home and its health standards will be the theme of the program at the biennial council meeting of the General Federation of Women's Clubs to be held in Grand Rapids, Michigan, May 30 to June 4. Forty-eight states, the District of Columbia and Alaska, will be represented at the meeting with a possible delegate body of 5,000 clubwomen.

"Setting thousands of home makers to talking about health standards is equal to a definite statement that they will be improved," says Mrs. John D. Sherman, president of the General Federation, "but that is not the only thing we are going to talk about. That subject will be uppermost in the minds during a number of sessions but the greater portion of the four days will be devoted to an intense study of the machinery of the general federation, an organization embracing millions of women in the United States, functioning in thousands of women's clubs.

"Health standards which affect the home will be made to apply to the community; the goal therefore of the General Federation of Women's Clubs is to strengthen the whole nation by beginning with the individual," continued Mrs. Sherman.

The Grand Rapids local organization in charge of the entertainment of the many visitors is composed of nearly a thousand Michigan women. Mrs. Dorian M. Russell is chairman. Various men's organizations of the city are associating themselves with the committee on entertainment and are actively planning to be of service in any capacity required.

Albany Council Highlights Presented on Official Page

By Bessie S. Stafford, Editor of Official Club Page.

Raising the standard of the American home, a closer communion with Georgia farm women by bringing into the federation the same number of clubwomen to match the 30,000 already enrolled on the roster; the onward march of Tallulah Industrial school towards educating underprivileged mountain children, so as to give them their rightful place in social, economical, and industrial life, for the progress of Georgia depends upon the welfare, prosperity, security, and development of its industrial citizens; the substantial part the student aid fund plays in educating Georgia boys and girls, and the functioning thereof; the uplift and development, generous service and achievement in the county achievement program, the object of which is a study of factors making for happy, wholesome living and to renewed effort in achieving these ideals, were outstanding themes of the second biennial conference held March 29-30-31 and April 1 in Albany.

Mrs. John Sherman, general federation president made a masterful appeal in her address, calling upon clubwomen to work for bettering home conditions, its equipment, environment discipline, music, art, recreation and upbringing of children. Mrs. Ira Farmer as home demonstration chairman, is striving to bring home demonstration councils in every county, to affiliate with the federation. There are 60 certified home demonstration agents in the state whose duty it is to develop leaders among women in rural communities. One hundred per cent for Tallulah is the slogan of the forthcoming year's work set by clubwomen and every club in the federation will make a gift whether large or small to the school which is operated, owned, and maintained by Georgia federation. Mrs. John K. Ottley, president of the board of trustees has made a brilliant and successful leader, whose steadfast purpose has been to bring Tallulah before Georgians so that the deep significance of the school might be learned. Mrs. H. B. Wey, mother and guardian of student aid fund, was not in attendance upon the council, but Mrs. Frank Woodruff's report was a lesson of great inspiration as the constructive report prepared by Mrs. Wey, whose health prevented her being present, definitely outlined the manner in which Georgia boys and girls are being educated. Mrs. Clifford Walker, presented the county achievement program calling for a centralization of the attention of community leaders upon problems in human welfare, covering health, education, religion, industry, agriculture, social welfare government, recreation, town and city planning, beautifying homes and highways.

Second Wins Flag.

The marked improvement in the learning and singing of "My Georgia Land," the federation's official song, was an outstanding feature of the council, with many of the districts entering the competition, and the second being declared victorious. Mrs. Samuel Inman, of Atlanta, offered the flag at the Augusta convention last year, stating that the district winning the flag becomes absolute owner. It was voted to let it remain in the Albany Woman's club, but the president, Mrs. J. A. Heard will have it placed at district meetings. Since the council, Mrs. Inman announces the offer of another flag for 1928, which remains in the victorious district. Her generous offer is certain to stimulate greater interest in the song contest held at the Decatur convention in 1928.

New Scholarship.

The Evelyn Watson Patterson $2,000 scholarship for Tallulah school was donated by J. M. Patterson in honor of his wife, who was the hospitable, gracious official hostess and president of Albany Woman's club. She was appointed good roads chairman and she proposes to check up on the county roads where appropriations have been made, and create sentiment to complete unfinished parts of Georgia roads at the earliest date, so that the state may compare with other southern states which have won national reputations for good roads. The district presidents evening Wednesday was by far the most interesting one in many years, each district bringing forward many vivid and constructive plans, showing that Georgia district presidents have met the obligation and responsibility assumed at election.

Mrs. John Davis, of Albany, chairman of pages, never left her post a moment during any session in the auditorium, keeping up with the women she had assigned to serve, and driving her car to and from the social entertainments two and three times, so as to transport guests. It was such unselfish acts as this which made the council a pleasant and happy occasion, for every citizen of Albany sensed a pride in taking care of the comfort of Georgia clubwomen.

The report of Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, chairman of business scholarships showed that the Southern Business and Shorthand college in Atlanta had given fifteen of the scholarships, valued at $1,500, and the others were gifts of Bryan Harris in college, Draughon Business college in Atlanta, and Athens Business and Georgia-Alabama Business college in Macon. The scholarships totaled 25 and represented $2,500.

Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, director from Georgia in the general federation displayed the largest number of club house pictures ever exhibited at a convention, the collection to be taken to the General Federation council in June, to be on exhibition in Grand Rapids, Mich. She was invited by Albany officials to address the high school girls and boys in the school auditorium Friday morning, choosing as her splendid subject, "Character Building." Mrs. Robert Heinson, recording secretary of the federation, gave upon special invitation a group of songs following Mrs. Richardson's speech.

Noteworthy Plans.

The Albany council recorded many noteworthy plans throughout the realms of clubdom, with work done for city and community needs, better housing conditions, the promotion of music and civic improvement. Mrs. A. P. Brantley's report was a most comprehensive and understanding document and she made a remarkable and handsome presiding officer, one who was at all times certain of herself. Parliamentary drills were led by Miss Rosa Woodberry, the most famous and finished woman parliamentarian in Georgia, and whose service to Georgia clubwomen has covered many years' duration. Miss Beverly Wheatcroft, executive secretary of the Georgia library commission, was in charge of the attractive display of maps and posters, setting forth the advantages of county library service for rural people, and clubwomen were urged to study the county library bill making possible the establishment of county libraries in Georgia to be introduced at the next legislature.

Mrs. Oscar Palmour, fifth district president, should be justly proud of the two victories of her clubwomen, in that the Dora Hill cup offered by the Dalton Woman's club for the largest number of junior clubs organized during last year, and the winning of the gavel for the largest number of credited clubs joining the federation. After the business was dispatched delegates were given delightful relaxation in social courtesies and were carried back to visions of colonial days in the reception given at "Ivy Court," the ancestral home of Mrs. J. R. Whitehead, the atmosphere smacking of early colonial times and historic relics. It is perfect in its architecture and Mrs. Whitehead offered it to the U. D. C., Richard Dale chapter, D. A. R., Thronateester chapter, D. A. R., and American Legion auxiliary hostess organizations. Great white columns support the roof and at the rear of the house a wonderful music room accommodates a hundred guests. Mrs. Whitehead, a picture of "Lavender and Old Lace," dressed in lavender satin, and richly cascaded in rose point lace, received the guests, while a family servant, her head wrapped in a red bandana, held a silver tray to receive the cards. Out on the lawn in the rear, bordered with purple and white iris in full blossom, a group of beautiful children, wearing colonial costumes and white wigs, danced the minuet. Mrs. J. M. Patterson's tea at her home, seven miles from Albany, was an enjoyable occasion, the guests served refreshments under the pecan trees, seated on marble benches. Over three hundred women were seated at the luncheon at the Kinchafoonee Country club, a very auspicious event at which a hot luncheon revived the spirits and made ready for a successful afternoon session. A number of talented singers entertained the visitors, warming their hearts with exquisite vocal selections; a quartet, composed of Mrs. H. H. Perry, Mrs. C. M. Strout, Mrs. G. K. Reiney and G. H. Thomas, with a solo rendered by Mrs. S. K. Simon. The Rotarians and Kiwanians were hospitable hosts at luncheons and the account of the council would be almost incomplete without a reference to the perfect weather which prevailed every day. Albany has a very rare and unusual spot of natural beauty called Skywater park, which was thrown open for inspection, the grandeur of which is indescribable, only to be appreciated through being seen, as 70,000 gallons of crystal water bubbles every minute from the depths of a blue rock bottom spring the water taking on rainbow tints. A magnificent casino built at the water-edge seats over 400 guests, offering excellent cuisine and service.

The Thomasville study club kept the president, Mrs. Brantley, supplied with exquisite roses and several baskets of flowers were presented Mrs. Sherman and the state president by Albany organizations. The Rotary and Kiwanis clubs entertained at a luncheon and a most unusual feature was that the men were present to entertain their guests. Each guest was presented a shoulder bouquet of sweet peas. Mrs. A. H. Brenner had the new report blanks for the districts on the wall for the information of the districts. The Lesche club, of Dalton, through Mrs. P. M. Herron, presented Mrs. Sherman a hand-made bedspread made by a woman in the county. Mrs. Sherman had stressed the rural club in her address the night before and had been told so much about the handwork of our mountain school girls that this gift was most appropriate.

Resolutions Passed.

The Georgia federation went on record favoring the passing and enforcement of a state law providing for the sound teachers' retirement system in the public schools of the state, patterned after the state teachers' retirement law now in force in New York with such changes as will make the law more adaptable to Georgia. The resolution recommended that a committee be appointed with authority to draft a bill of this character to be introduced at the next regular session of the general assembly, and strongly recommended that various clubs affiliated with the Georgia federation be urged to use influence towards creating a sentiment in favor of the enactment of such legislation.

The council adopted the plan outlined by the Jackson Woman's club of the sixth district to convert Indian Springs into a state park, thereby preserving its historical value and conserving for future generations its natural beauty and history.

Home Economics Favored.

Another resolution of importance which was passed by the council included the indorsement and fostering of the program of home economics under the Georgia state board of vocational education, and that separate clubs indorse the program, urging individual members to make an effort to bring to the attention of the general assembly the importance of this type of training in the hope of securing a larger state appropriation for the vocational education in the expanse of the program of home economics work, including all-day, part-time and evening classes.

The council expressed cordial satisfaction in the organization of groups of young women in cities and towns of Georgia for the avowed purpose of giving encouragement and financial aid to Tallulah Industrial School, Inc., known as "Tallulah Circles," and formed with the approval of trustees of the school as represented by the president of the board or local federated clubs, with an advisory committee of such proper number as desired by the circle.

The school is to be the sole beneficiary of these circles whose object shall be to help in the education of the underprivileged mountain children of Georgia whose future life progress and well-being depends upon the personal interest of the individual interested in educational and constructive work.

Four Districts Score One Hundred For Tallulah

The "100 per cent for Tallulah" idea was a great hit at Albany council and brought forth a great many proofs of loyalty from clubs to their districts every one of which was anxious to qualify with every club in their district making some contribution—whether large or small—for the annual maintenance of Georgia federation's mountain school at Tallulah Falls.

The districts which first reached the coveted goal of all clubs giving were the largest and the smallest in the state, Mrs. Oscar Palmour, of College Park, president of the fifth district, and Mrs. J. Cleveland Meadows, of Vidalia, president of the twelfth district, having secured 100 per cent report with every club giving.

Before the reports were read on Thursday morning two more districts had come through and Mrs. I. A. Heard, of Moultrie, second district president, and Mrs. J. W. Gholston, of Comer, president of eighth district, were able to stand proudly up when the "100 per cent for Tallulah" test was made.

Mrs. R. E. Lee, of Fitzgerald, president third district, expressed herself as positive that her clubs would qualify as 100 per cent when the school's books are finally closed on May 31.

Mrs. E. Downer Dimmock, of Waycross, president eleventh district; Mrs. W. B. Smith, of Tennille, president of tenth district; Mrs. Fred Brinson, of Millen, president of first district, and Mrs. C. H. McGarrity, of Dallas, president seventh district, were also optimistic as to the completion by their districts of the 100 per cent plan, by the end of year.

Mrs. J. E. McElroy, of Waycross, president ninth district; Mrs. L. C. Warren, of Griffin, president sixth district, and Mrs. Henry M. Bird, of Bowdon, president fourth district, were detained from attendance at Albany council and so those districts could make no statement but it is probable that the federated clubs of Georgia through their districts, will go as a whole into the forthcoming year book as 100 per cent in gifts for their "Light in the Mountains."

One of the best examples of the federated spirit which deems 100 per cent none too goood for its own district is expressed in the following letter from Mrs. H. H. Turner, secretary the Fifty-Fifty club, of which Mrs. W. T. Mooney is president, which reached Albany with a check for $10 in ample time (with $5 from the Uncle Remus association), to pull the fifth district to 100 per cent. "The Fifty-Fifty club is a very small club organized strictly for study. It has no dues and is prohibited by its by-laws from making any assessment or contribution for any purpose. Its members are also members of other clubs and through those other clubs make their contributions. We, however, learn that the lack of a contribution from this club will prevent this (fifth) district from having a 100 per cent contribution record to Tallulah school. We believe that our district should never have less than a 100 per cent report. To this end the members of the club individually contribute to the school in the name of the Fifty-Fifty club. We wish to the convention success."

Seventh District Is Engaged in Splendid Work

The Paulding county institute, held at the Dallas Woman's clubhouse, called together some of the most eminent women of the state. Mrs. Alonzo Richardson, of Atlanta, director for Georgia in the general federation, spoke on "Our Obligations to Our General Federation" and "Club Ethics." Mrs. Richardson's appeal to the women to give their best to their club work and to help to keep Georgia among the first states in the Union in club efficiency was most inspiring.

Mrs. Ira Farmer, of Atlanta, state chairman of home economics, talked along the line of which she is familiar and the subject dearest to her heart, "Cooperation of Rural and Town Women," and stressed helping the farmer and the farmers' wives. Mrs. Farmer for several years ran a 500-acre farm near Thomson, Ga., and the difficulties which confront the farmers and their wives have been her own difficulties.

Mrs. W. C. Jarnigan, of Atlanta, on the staff of The Atlanta Georgian, talked of "Good Publicity and its Value." She gave an inside view of a newspaper office and told of some of the difficulties with which they have to cope, stressing the importance of getting in news while it is news and briefness.

Mrs. L. C. Waldrop, of Tallapoosa, seventh district chairman of club institutes, talked on the purpose and importance of the institutes. Mrs. C. B. McGarity, president of the seventh district federation, gave an inspiring talk on "Our Obligation to Our State Federation."

Mrs. R. F. McCormack, of Atlanta, president of the Atlanta P.-T. A., and Mrs. A. V. Howe and Mrs. J. H. Tomlin, both of Tallapoosa, were also guests.

Eton Civic League.

Mrs. W. M. Jackson was hostess to the Eton Civic league and the following program was given:

Subject—Home.

Song—"Home, Sweet Home."

Sketch—"What Is the Matter With the American Home?" by Mrs. Florence Lowry.

Poem—"A Heap o' Livin'," by Mrs. W. M. Jackson.

Mrs. J. C. Loughridge gave a poem, "Let Home Come First."

Mrs. J. P. Loughridge read an article on "Early Customs and Habits of Georgia," left over from the "Georgia" program which was given at the February meeting.

A St. Patrick program included "Why We Celebrate St. Patrick's Birthday on the 17th," given by Miss Florida Harris; contest, in which Mrs. W. W. Keith and Mrs. R. N. Steed tied for first prize, Mrs. Steed finally winning the very dainty organdie boudoir bandeau.

Mrs. W. W. Keith and Miss Elizabeth Jackson rendered piano selections.

Lesche Club.

Mrs. Karl Showalter, chairman of civis committee of the Lesche Woman's club, of Dalton, reported $12 towards planting shrubs and flowers in Lesche park at the March meeting, presided over by Miss Mary Horan, president.

Mrs. W. M. Jones stated that the suggestion had been made that each member contribute one chair for the new clubhouse, while $70 has already been given by individual members for the cause. A rummage sale takes place Saturday, April 2.

The program was given by Miss Elizabeth Hamilton, the subject being "The Bible an Inspiration to Art." Miss Hamilton gave an instructive talk on Italian art and artists and told the stories of the lives and works of Raphael, Titian, Michael Angeli and many others. She exhibited prints and colored photographs of all the famous madonnas and many Bible scenes, which were very interest and much enjoyed by the club. A paper, "Mandonnas in Art," written by Mrs. Kate Harben Jones, of Detroit, a former Daltonian and a sister of Will N. Harben, was read by Miss Evelyn Longley.

Tributes to motherhood were paid by the author, stating that perfect womanhood idealized, inspired artists of all time as they pictured the fine face of the mother of Christ.

A Lilliputian wedding was presented by 60 Acworth children Thursday night at the school auditorium, the play being directed by Mrs. C. G. Durham and Mrs. L. M. Autry.

The proceeds will go for the benefit of the Carrie Dyar Reading club, which celebrated the 29th anniversary at the clubhouse, entertaining the club members, their husbands and friends.

Augusta Clubwomen Indorse Mrs. Brenner for President

At the April meeting of the Augusta Woman's club, held Tuesday, April 15, the executive board officially indorsed Mrs. A. H. Brenner, of Augusta, for the position of state president of the Georgia federation at the expiration of Mrs. Brantley's term of office, which expires next May. The board expressed the opinion that Mrs. Brenner is entitled to this position through rotation of office and because she has so ably filled the position of vice president. Mrs. Brenner was an outstanding figure at the recent biennial and has a long record of splendid service as state, district and local officer in many different positions. She was an organizer of the Augusta Woman's club and has twice served as president.

The luncheon was under the auspices of the division of literature, with Mrs. Thomas J. Hamilton as chairman. Mrs. David Nachman presided and gave a most interesting report of the biennial in Albany. Lawton B. Evans gave a talk on "The Charm of Books," featuring advice as to how to read and what to read. "The Charm of books," he said, "is a matter of taste and as indefinable as the charm of a person." He urged the women to read the books that required no mental effort and to do some "mental mountaineering" occasionally.

An important feature was the announcement of the winner of the short story contest, Mrs. Hamilton naming Mrs. M. M. Hurst as the successful contestant, her story being entitled "Just Lila." Announcement was made of the "better homes" campaign, in charge of Mrs. Martha Andrews, beginning Sunday, April 14, and asked the cooperation of every member.

Cordial cooperation and interest was expressed in "Greate Augusta Expansion" campaign, the club expressing its satisfaction that it is represented in the chamber of commerce, and pledged its fullest cooperation and support in all the movements for the growth of Augusta. Little Miss Alice Hamilton rendered "Rondo Mignon" and Mrs. George Craig's voice was heard in several brilliant numbers, the accompaniments being by Mrs. T. Harry Garrett.

Midville Club Donates $100 to Tallulah.

Savannah, Ga., April 9.—A maintenance gift of $100 for Tallulah Falls school from a club of 37 members in Wayne county was the outstanding feature of the convention of clubs of the first district of the Georgia federation held at The Morning News town hall in Savannah March 1. Mrs. I. F. Wells announced the gift from the Midville Woman's club of which she is Tallulah Falls school chairman.

The Huntingdon club entertained at tea after a program meeting, at which convention delegates were guests of honor.

Fine Arts Breakfast at Albany Described by Mrs. Hodgson

BY MRS. HUGH HODGSON,
State Music Chairman.

May I say this morning just a few words concerning what I believe is the most urgent need of the music world in Georgia and America today? I shall, perhaps, surprise some of you when I say it is not more musicians, not additional contributions to the music library and, in spite of the dirth of them, it is not more congenial halls. The musicians and their brothers, the creative artists, cannot be held down, they will eventually rise above all opposition and find their places—the buildings will be the inevitable result of progress—but what shall the musicians each with an artistic surrounding as to the hall do, without the sympathetic ear? In other words, the eventual result depends far more than most of us realize on the audience—on the American public—on the people of Georgia.

Artistic Sense.

We have been so absorbed, and rightly so, in the establishment of our economic world, in building up the financial interests which are now, in some instances becoming the much-needed patrons of art, that we have neglected to an alarming extent the development of the artistic sense in our young. It is useless to force a grown man or woman to sit through an evening of music and hope for any beneficial results. The artists can spot them at once and join the poor sufferer in wishing he were anywhere else, for he has so steeled himself and has locked his mind so tight against any possible appeal that he really hardly knows what is going on, and emerges believing he hates music more than ever. This type is the direct result of environment, and for him there is no hope, it is a case of "too late."

There is another type of grownup, without any of the fundamental training of music and who, having mostly what is causing the terrific palpitations from which the music world of America is now suffering—jazz—would earnestly like to know something of the marvelous comfort music seems to bring to others. It is in this type; in the process we should adopt in trying to develop him, and in our babies, who have not yet become a type that our work must center. May I suggest that to suddenly introduce the former, our friend who wants our help, to the marvels of Beethoven's symphonies, to Parsifal to a string quartet, or to an entire evening of German Lieder would be nothing short of folly. We must remember that he is musically nearsighted and to interest him we must begin with legitimate music of the most evident human appeal. I would suggest that we show him first some of the beauties of the old American ballads, which may have escaped his casual hearing; that we gradually add a few of the great songs of all time, explaining the text, and thus lead him into the instrumental world by combining the two in one of the lighter operas, Faust, perhaps, or Butterfly. Having successfully progressed this far it is my opinion that our patient is well on the way toward the enjoyment of the great symphonies and eventually chamber music. And each convert of this type is of inestimable value to his community.

Hope of Music World.

Now let us think for a moment of the real hope of the music world, our babies, and I would exactly reverse the order. I am perfectly sure that in the instance of the love of music, environment is far more important than heredity, and if I were asked by a young mother of no musical ability, or a limited amount, when she should begin the musical education of her child, I should say, just as soon as the child can hear anything at all. I should advise her to secure the best reproducing machine possible and with it many of the greatest compositions of the world, executed by the best artists available. I believe that if this plan were followed out, if the young child heard every day, good music, well executed and as little jazz as possible in the home, through babyhood and young childhood; that if this were followed by intelligent instruction in music appreciation in the school, the result would be a youth who would reject of his own inherent aversion, the sensuous jungle ryth with its devastating effect with which our young people of today are increasing their burden of influence to be combated. Do not misunderstand me, I am a staunch supporter of the youth of today. If they are not what they might be musically it is the result of their environment and we must shoulder the responsibility. Children, generally speaking, learn only what they are guided to see, and we who know the path must lead them or allow them to wander on indefinitely in the jungle of jazz.

And as I make my appeal, that we begin in the home, advancing to the school, leading and teaching our young to love and have due respect for, the beautiful in nature, in art and music.

ATLANTA SHOWS BUILDING GAIN

March Proves Record Month, While Nation at Large Has Sharp Slump in Construction.

In contrast with the healthy construction conditions of Atlanta, as revealed by the summary of March building permits, published in The Constitution last Sunday and showing March to be the record month of 1927 totals so far, S. W. Straus and company of New York, characterized the building operations of the country at large as on the decline. The report follows:

"Although there are some cities where building operations at the present time are definitely on the upgrade, the country as a whole is showing an emphatic slowing up, according to the national monthly building survey.

"In the 416 leading building centers, permits amounting to $380,929,375 were issued in March, compared with $415,899,078 for March last year, a loss of 8 per cent. During the first quarter the same cities and towns recorded permits of $888,598,383 compared with $933,717,817 during the same quarter last year. The loss for the quarter was 5 per cent, which, if sustained at the same rate in every community in the country, would mean a national loss in prospective buildings of about $100,000,000.

"New York city, which continues to lead the country in volume of building activities, sustained a loss of nearly $12,000,000 in plans filed in March compared with the same month last year. New York showed a gain, however, of about $2,000,000 for the quarter. Chicago far outstripped every other city in the volume of gain both for the month of March and for the quarterly period. The March gain compared with the same month last year was $14,000,000, while the gain for the quarter was more than $27,000,000, or 35 per cent. The percentage of gains in other large cities were: Providence, 110 per cent; Columbus, Ohio, 68 per cent; Yonkers, 34 per cent; Louisville, 33 per cent; Milwaukee, 38 per cent; Akron, Ohio, 20 per cent; Buffalo, 18 per cent; Newark, N. J., 21 per cent; Portland, Ore., 9 per cent, and Indianapolis, 18 per cent.

"While the gains in these centers were empressive, the rank and file of communities through the country continued to show a slower pace in building activities," according to the Straus reports.

REALTORS WILL HEAR NATIONAL WORKER AT LUNCH

Lou Harrington, fields representative of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, will be guest of honor and principal speaker at the Atlanta Real Estate board luncheon, 12:30 o'clock next Friday, at the Atlanta Athletic club, it was announced Saturday by Dana Belser, president of the local association.

"An interesting program has been arranged for this luncheon meeting and members who are active and interested in the work of the board are especially requested to attend, since important topics of interest and benefit will be discussed," Mr. Belser stated.

Mr. Harrington will speak on the subject, "The Value of a Real Estate Board to Its Members."

Mr. Harrington is in charge of the extension work of the National Association of Real Estate Boards in this section, and has had many years of active experience as a real estate man and an executive. He is in a position to discuss this subject in a way that will be helpful to all. The speaker has also been a members of the national association for many years and always had an active part at all conventions, Mr. Belser said.

REALTY MEN SEEK REPRESENTATION IN U. S. CHAMBER

Real estate interests of the United States this week in a communication sent out to the 1,500 member bodies of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, ask representation in the councils of the chamber through election of Andrew J. Kelly, of Pittsburgh, president of the Commonwealth Real Estate company, as a member of the board of directors of the chamber to represent the department of civic development, according to local dispatches from the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Mr. Kelly, a director of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, has for three years served as the councillor of the association in the United States Chamber of Commerce.

Selection of Mr. Kelly would make possible more effective cooperation of the real estate interests of the country with the chamber in the development of sane nation-wide policies with respect to state and local taxation, a matter in which the United States chamber has made a fine beginning, the communication, signed by C. C. Hientt, of Louisville, president of the National Asociation of Real Estate Boards, points out.

"In the matter of civic development real estate owners and developers also have a vital interest," the communication further states. "By coordinating the civic work of our 680 local real estate boards with the local chambers of commerce through the national chamber by means of representation upon its directorate we can all get better results."

Real estate interests represent nearly half the wealth of the country, the association points out in asking for recognition.

MAN WHO LIVED ON $2.61 WEEKLY AVERAGE IS DEAD

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—James Joy Jeffries, known throughout the country as the "railroad evangelist," died suddenly today, just after holding morning prayer service, and brought to an end his efforts to live on an average weekly expenditure of $2.61.

For five years he had set himself to living as cheaply as possible, as an example to down and outers. He ate no meat. His weight at the time of his death was 105 pounds.

The evangelist wore overalls for clothing on all occasions. For shelter when the weather was unfriendly there were always the cheap "flops"—10 or 25 cents a night. He never took up a collection at his evangelistic meetings and never begged.

Mr. Jeffries left an estate in his right-hand overall pocket of 75 cents, a handkerchief and a small Bible.

He died at the home of a friend, A. E. Nissen, where he had gone to conduct worship for a group of homeless boys sheltered there.

J. B. ROYER JOINS GRANT COMPANY

John B. Royer, who has risen to prominence in the real estate profession through his many years of earnest endeavor, has associated himself with the organization of B. M. Grant company, one of Atlanta's best-known realty firms.

JOHN B. ROYER.

Mr. Royer, a southerner by birth, recently came to Atlanta from Baltimore, where for 10 years he operated a real estate firm under the name of John B. Royer and company. When Mr. Royer returned south, he disposed of his business to his employees. For a while he was connected with Adams-Cates company.

Mr. Royer has many friends in Atlanta, having visited here on former occasions and being the brother of William C. Royer, associate manager of the Atlanta Biltmore hotel. He has always been active in civic as well as business circles and has served on important appointments with the Real Estate board of Baltimore.

Mr. Royer is a strong advocate of the exclusive listing system, which was attended here some time ago by the Atlanta Real Estate board. He pointed out that virtues of the system are admitted by most realtors but that execution of the plan requires careful and intricate detail work, long experience and cooperation to put it on a successful basis. He has gained expert knowledge of this work through his work with the executive committee of the multiple listing bureau of the Baltimore real estate board, where the system is one of the leading features of the realty profession.

"The exclusive listings system is best for the seller and the buyer, and promotes closer cooperation between real estate brokers," Mr. Royer stated, adding that it eventually will be firmly established in Atlanta.

In his present connection with the B. M. Grant organization, Mr. Roger will specialize in high-grade homes on the north side.

W. A. STOKES, JR., DELIVERS FIRST OF REALTY TALKS

The first of a series of six lectures dealing with "Selling Real Estate" was held at the office of the Real Estate board Thursday afternoon.

W. A. Stokes, Jr., of the Adair Realty and Loan company, was the speaker and his subject was "Preparations That Are Helpful in Beginning as a Real Estate Salesman." He pointed out that a man beginning to sell real estate should prepare himself and study the details and modern methods pertaining to selling.

Thirty members of the board were present and all expressed themselves as pleased with the manner in which the subject was handled.

The second of the series of lectures will be held at 4:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon. The speaker will be A. J. McBride, who will take as his subject, "Securing Prospects and Listings." This is considered an important topic in selling of real estate. Through the speaker's many years of experience in this work he is especially qualified to talk on the subject.

Dana Belser, president of the board, urges all members to attend these talks. "Real estate education is growing in prominence each day, and the man who is familiar with modern sales methods is better equipped to handle real estate transactions to the satisfaction of all concerned," Mr. Belser declared.

3 WORKERS BURIED IN BIG LANDSLIDE

Wenatchee, Wash., April 9.—(AP)—Three workmen were buried under tons of clay today at a dam for a water company being built near Chelan. With little hope they would be found alive, 150 workmen dug furiously at the slide.

First reports were that 30 men had been buried but a check of the workmen disclosed that only three were missing. Others who were working in a pit leaped to safety when the slide began.

Southeast Building Grows 59 Per Cent Over February

The southeastern states (the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Louisiana) had $73,544,800 in contracts for new construction work during March. The above figure represents an increase of 59 per cent over February and a loss of 15 per cent from March of last year. The more important items in last month's record were: $23,870,100, or 32 per cent of all construction, for public works and utilities; $17,262,100, or 23 per cent, for residential buildings; $13,812,500, or 19 per cent, for industrial buildings; and $7,863,000, or 11 per cent, for commercial projects.

During the first quarter of this year there was $161,981,700 worth of new construction work started in this district, which is a decrease of 32 per cent from the corresponding period of last year.

Contemplated new work planned for the southeastern states as reported in March amounted to $177,844,300. This figure is more than double the amount reported in February and 8 per cent over the amount reported in March, 1926.

Construction contracts to the amount of $620,738,200, were awarded last month in the 37 states east of the Rocky mountains, according to F. W. Dodge corporation. This tops the previous high record of August, 1925, by $9,000,000. The increase over March, 1926, was nearly 4 per cent and the increase over February of this year was 57 per cent.

The March record brought the contract total for the first quarter of this year up to $1,398,776,100, which is only about 4 1-2 per cent below the figure for the corresponding period of last year. At the end of January this year was 16 per cent behind last year; at the end of February, 10 per cent behind; at the end of March, only 4 1-2 per cent behind. This shows that there was in March a quite considerable recovery from the low contract volumes of the preceding two months.

Last month's record included the following important items: $250,078,300, or 40 per cent of all construction, for residential buildings; $113,766,000, or 18 per cent, for commercial buildings; $106,826,900, or 17 per cent, for public works and utilities; $48,076,600, or 8 per cent, for industrial buildings; and $36,521,800, or 6 per cent, for educational buildings.

Contemplated new construction was reported in March to the amount of $1,198,090,900, an increase of 16 per cent over March, 1926. This record total of contemplated work indicates an upturn in construction demand

REALTORS INVITED TO AVONDALE LUNCH

Members of the Atlanta Real Estate board will be the guests of G. F. Willis, developer of Avondale Estates, at a barbecue on the beautiful grounds, at 1 o'clock next Wednesday afternoon, it was announced Saturday by Dana Belser, president of the local board.

"This is the third annual barbecue that Mr. Willis has extended to the members of the real estate board. It will be served this year in the park adjoining the swimming pool at Avondale. As host, Mr. Willis in the past has exceeded all expectations, and the inivtation as extended by Mr. Willis to members of the board each year is looked forward to and enjoyed a great deal by all," Mr. Belser asserted.

President Belser stated that in the past year great progress in development has taken place at Avondale, and requested members of the board to be at Avondale by 12 o'clock on Wednesday for the purpose of going over the property and carefully inspecting the marvelous growth in this wonderful home subdivision.

"There are three 'Homes Beautiful' completely furnished and equipped in Avondale, and everyone is invited to visit these modern homes and view the excellent appointments and furnishings therein.

"It is especially desired that 100 per cent attendance of the members of the board be had, and detailed announcements have been sent to all. From the present manifestations and interest a record crowd will be on hand."

ATHENS COTTON MILLS RUNNING FULL TIME

Athens, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—The cotton mills of Clarke county are running at maximum time and are reported to have their products sold several months in advance. This is true in every line of the industry here, which is varied. Two of the largest mills in the county are running day and night while the others are running full-day capacity. The James White mills at Barnett shoals are running day and night and in addition, the present number of looms are being doubled to increase the output to meet the demand. These mills are manufactured exclusively broadcloth shirting and are sold up through the summer and early fall.

Some time ago the Whiteford company was organized to manufacture shirts here and to esablish a sales organization for shirts, hose and kindred lines throughout the south, utilizing in the manufacture of the shirts goods made at Mr. White's mills, but so far as the demand has been so great his raw material that he has been forced to buy the cloth for the shirts made. The shirt factory opened about two weeks ago and is running about 50 dozen shirts per week ahead of the contemplated output.

The Atlanta Manufacturing company making a high-grade fabric for cord tires, is running day and night. That plant is also expanding, having doubled its capacity in the past two years, including the improvements now being put in and which will be in operation by July 1.

The Southern Manufacturing company, one of the largest mills in this section, is also operating on full day time. The Georgia factory at Whitehall, making sheeting exclusively, is running full time. The Mallison Braided Cord mills are running night and day and are reported to have their output sold in advance several months.

The Princeton mills are running full time and so are the Clarke mills.

PACE'S FERRY TRACT SOLD FOR $50,000

Sale of a large tract of land in the Pace's Ferry road section for a consideration of approximately $50,000 was announced Saturday by the Draper-Owens company, which acted as agent in the transaction.

The property, having a frontage of 800 feet on Pace's Ferry road and running back 1,200 feet on Randall Mill road, was formerly owned by G. F. Willis, developer of Avondale Estates. The Draper-Owens company sold it for Mr. Willis to Judge Percy H. Adams.

So far as it is known Judge Adams bought the parcel for an investment. It is situated close to the residential estate section containing some of Atlanta's most attractive homes.

The sale represents one of the largest transactions consummated during the past 30 days, and is one of a series of large deals announced by the Draper-Owens company since the first of the year.

HELENA GROUND IS WORTH MORE THAN BUILDINGS

Helena, Mont., April 9.—(AP)—The ground beneath the old business section of Helena is worth more than the business houses, in the opinion of O. M. Lanstrum, pioneer mining man. He ventures the assertion that from one to three million dollars could be recovered by modern methods from the dirt under the ancient buildings at the upper end of Main street, formerly Last Chance gulch.

So far there had been no indication that owners of the properties will tear down the buildings and make Helena another Weepah. Place miners, in the early 60s, took fortunes in gold dust from Last Chance gulch. Enough gold to pay for the work of building the city's principal hotel was reported a few years ago to have been panned by the contractor from the excavation dirt. Even now heavy rains bring occasional nuggets down into the gulch.

MARVELOUS RESULTS and PHENOMENAL CURES

Appeal to all sufferers, especially if they have been unsuccessful in obtaining results and have been told that their diseases are incurable. Dr. Hughes is not a "cure all" by any means. He is an expert, dependable specialist of education and experience. His reputation is firmly established, and his practice is conducted along the highest professional lines. No exaggerated or deceptive assertions or claims are allowed in his announcements.

He does not accept incurable or doubtful cases for treatment, but he must evidently be doing a wonderful work for sick and afflicted humanity; patients are singing his praise from far and near. These patients have received real results and they are happy to have the privilege of telling others.

Dr. Hughes is filling a long felt need in Atlanta and surrounding country. He is honestly and frankly advising all patients the proper course to pursue. He makes no false promises, neither does he hold out impossible hopes.

Dr. Hughes does not attempt to prescribe, diagnose or treat patients by mail—neither does he give glittering guarantees. If a case, in his opinion, is a curable one he will accept same for a nominal charge and arrange terms to suit patients' convenience. If you are suffering from any of the following diseases, call at once for free consultation and advice: Catarrh and all associated complications; Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Uric Acid, Gallstones, High Blood Pressure, Asthma, Epilepsy, Stomach, Liver, Kidney, Bladder and Prostatic Affections; Nerve, Blood and Skin diseases; Contracted diseases; burning and irritating discharges; Pelvic diseases peculiar to women (female weakness in all forms), Nerve-Vital diseases of men; Rectal diseases (non-surgical). HOT DOG!

You may call this HOT AIR, you may call it prevaricating, you may call it "Shooting the Cow," or anything you please, but we call it the Gospel Truth. The latter part of December we began the erection of three HOPKINS CALIFORNIA COLONIAL BUNGALOWS on Glen Iris Drive. They were all sold before their completion. We are now completing four more in the same block AND every dad-burned one of them were sold before they were completed, to which fact officials of the Atlanta Title and Trust Co. will testify. Now what we are talking about, they are SOLD; good substantial payments on every one of them, sold to good people whom we know are O. K. We are going to complete the block right away; only three lots left. If you want a home for Seven Thousand to Seventy-five Hundred Dollars, the kind that others are getting from eight to ten thousand dollars for in other sections that are no better, better get in touch with us, for HOPKINS BUNGALOWS are the talk of the town. They sell fast because they are different, cozy, neat, attractive, conveniently arranged and built with an eye to comfort and economy. Ask anyone who lives in one, ask anyone who has ever inspected one, ask the material men what quality material we use, come out and look at them before they are painted, take a look at our mechanics. Try to find a HOPKINS BUNGALOW that ever stood vacant thirty days after completion. Again we say, HOPKINS BUNGALOWS are the talk of the town. Make us a reasonable cash payment and pay the balance like rent. We have been in the game for twenty-five years and "We Are Acquainted With Our Onions." We will build for you on your lot and arrange financing or we will develop your subdivision. Remember, all this talk about HOPKINS BUNGALOWS is not without a good reason.

P. B. HOPKINS & SON, PALMER BLDG.

P. S.—WE are building three Hopkins California Bungalows on S. Gordon St. in West End Park; one already SOLD.

DIXIE VETERANS GET MOST CASH

Washington, April 9.—(AP)—Southern cities lead in the amounts of money allocated to veterans' bureau offices for loans to veterans on their adjusted service certificates. A recapitulation up to the close of business today showed that $5,780,000 had been allocated.

The veterans' bureau has sold $5,000,000 of the Liberty bond holdings in the government life insurance fund, which brings the amount available for loans during April to $13,000,000.

The office at Dallas has received $393,000; Atlanta, $335,000, and New Orleans, $310,000. Other cities to which amounts in excess of $200,000 have been allocated include: St. Louis, $292,000; Boston, $223,000; Chicago, $221,000; Washington, $220,000, and New York, $216,000.

The smallest amount in the continental United States was requested at the Burlington, Vt., office, which asked $35,000. The regional office at Manila asked for $15,000 on the estimate that the amount would be sought by the former soldiers, sailors and marines.

Minnesota is far ahead in the amount of money actually loaned by banks on bonus certificates loans there reaching $7,507,826. The next highest rates were California, whose banks loaned $2,720,777, and Pennsylvania, $2,438,116; Illinois, $2,196,715, and New York, $1,946,555. The smallest amount was in Delaware, where banks loaned an aggregate of $92,059.

Only Hiddenite Mine in World Operating Again

Raleigh, N. C., April 9.—(AP)—Idle for more than a generation the only hiddenite mine in the world is again steadily in operation, Dr. Joseph Hyde Pratt, president of the state forestry association and former state geologist, said here today.

This rarest of all gems, said Mr. Pratt, is being produced in the locality near Taylorsville in which it is known to exist, after the effort to secure it is quantity had long been abandoned.

The work is being carried on by the Hiddenite Mining company and operations lasting more than a year have resulted in important additions being made to the existing supply which is for the most part in the hands of collectors. In fact, he said, all gems produced have been sold to Burnham S. Colburn, of Biltmore forest, near Asheville, one of the foremost American collectors of minerals who desired them particularly in order to increase the completeness of his North Carolina collection, to which he is giving special attention.

That mining hiddenite is slow work is shown by the report of the production of the mine.

During a year of operation, Dr. Pratt said there had been produced from a large quantity of rock treated about 90 carats of the gem crystals, of which 21 were of gem quality. They will make 49 carats of hiddenite as known in gem form, it is said.

Asked as to the commercial value placed on hiddenite, Dr. Pratt said that it was about $100 a carat. The output of the mine where four or five men are employed, has therefore had a value since operations were resumed of around $5,000.

ENGAGEMENT RINGS FOR MEN OFFERED BY CHICAGO SHOPS

Chicago, April 9.—(AP)—By their rings you shall know them—if a custom of engagement rings for men promoted by several downtown jewelry stores becomes the general practice.

Women customers are almost unanimous in their approval of rings to show that their men are no longer on the matrimonial market, but men are somewhat reluctant to proclaim by a finger band their intentions, retailers say. However, enough of them have accepted the decree to make the business worthwhile.

The rings designed for engagements, for the most part, bear a cameo setting, but some of them are made up with the birthstone of the intended.

Joplin, Mo., April 9.—(AP)—Miss Clarissa H. Spencer, of New York, one of the eight founders of the modern Young Women's Christian association and general secretary of the world Y. W. C. A. for 16 years, died here today.

IRISH BISHOPS HIT IMMODEST GOWNS

BY CHARLES M. McCANN.

London, April 9.—(United Press.) Under the leadership of Cardinal O'Donnell, Irish Roman Catholic bishops have launched a heavy Lenten offensive against the modern girl's dress, dancing, and attendance at the movies.

The cardinal contented himself, in his pastoral letter, with denouncing the movies, and warning mothers to be careful regarding the sort their children were permitted to attend.

Three bishops roundly denounced almost every modern tendency as regards girls' dress and amusement.

"An alarming lowering of the sense of modestry is manifesting itself," declared Bishop Bernard O'Kane, of Derry. "Slavish accommodation to fashion, dictated from other countries, results in wearing dress which, even out of doors, is far from modest, but in society and at balls and dances is positively immodest, suggestive, and an open incentive to passion.

"A greater cause for anxiety is the senseless infatuation which will be satisfied only by dancing, a corrupt plague which is spreading rapidly, dealing ruin to many homes."

TRAFFIC CLUB HOLDS ITS ANNUAL OUTING

With more than 200 of the leading traffic men of the city present, the annual outing and barbecue of the Traffic club of Atlanta was held Saturday afternoon at the industrial yards of the Central of Georgia railroad, near East Point.

Following a big barbecue, served shortly after noon, speaking and an entertainment program was given. T. D. Curtis, president of the club, was the principal speaker.

NEGRO BANDITS ROB SODA STAND OWNER

William Vergeotis, who operates a soda stand at 170 Auburn avenue, reported to police that he was held up by two negro bandits early Saturday night and his cash register robbed of its contents. He told Call Officers Olin Williams and R. E. Floyd that while one negro held him the other robbed the cash register. Just how much was taken was not learned as Vergeotis had not checked up on his day's receipts.

Former "Bootlegger Queen" Is Woman Without Country

:: MRS. CASARES J. DEPORTED BY ENGLAND ::

Liverpool, England, April 9.—(AP)—Mme. Glorida de Casares, Jr., English-born ex-wife of an Argentine, and once characterized by the English newspapers as "queen of the bootleggers," is a woman without a country.

She tearfully admitted this today prior to sailing for New York on the steamer Caronia, having been ordered deported by the home office for some reason unannounced.

For a time today it seemed as if Mme. de Casares would be compelled to sail with only the clothes she wore, for a sheriff's officer seized her baggage on a writ on behalf of a London real estate firm. At the last minute, however, a Liverpool man, who name was not given, acted as a good Samaritan and gave a guarantee for 200 pounds sterling due on the writ. Her apparel then was rushed to the steamer in an automobile and placed on board just before the Caronia put to sea. The man who advanced the money also is a passenger on the steamer.

"It has been too much for me," Mme. de Casares exclaimed amid tears to an interviewer in her cabin aboard the steamship. "I am a wanderer without a home; I have nowhere to go."

When a reporter called on her in her room at the hotel prior to her departure for the steamer, the sheriff's officer was present and had her luggage under his eyes. The woman pointed out the man to her visitor and stamped her foot in vexation.

"I am deprived of my nationality because of my marriage to a foreigner," she explained. "Now they seek to deprive me of my clothes. This gentleman tells me he is empowered to take everything I have as long as he leaves me clothes to the value of five pounds."

Here Mme. de Casares laughed hysterically, and added:

"It's enough only for a hat. How can a woman go about from one part of the world to another with five pounds sterling worth of clothes. The whole thing is ridiculous!"

Coolidge Sole Pardon Hope Of Carroll

Washington, D. C., April 9.—(United News.)—Whether Earl Carroll, youthful New York theatrical producer, will serve his 366-day perjury sentence in Atlanta penitentiary depends upon President Coolidge.

The justice department revealed today it was preparing a brief for the president in the case after Carroll's friends had appealed through the department for executive clemency.

The president can pardon Carroll, commute his sentence, free him with a fine or determine that he must serve his time as decreed finally by the United States supreme court recently.

The justice department made some mystery of the names of those who interceded for Carroll, but it was said Joyce Hawley, "bath-tub girl," was not one of them. Carroll's perjury about the "bath-tub party" he gave with Joyce in the leading role led to the conviction. The justice department hitherto has held Carroll could expect no clemency, but whether it recommends mercy now is a matter of officials would not discuss.

ROBBERS BUSY THROUGHOUT CITY SATURDAY NIGHT

J. Shamos, who operates a grocery at 167 Nelson street, was held up Saturday night by two unidentified negroes and robbed of $15, according to police reports.

A negro delivery boy was shot at five times, according to information given Call Officers M. D. Cartwright and A. M. Davis.

Another negro, James Head, who was in the store at the time, ran out and shot six times at the robbers. He told officers that one shot took effect.

Albert Rice, of Aurora, Ill., reported to police that his pocket was picked of $40.

Otis Sharp, of Lewisburg, Tenn., reported that a negro woman grabbed him as he walked along Elliott street near the Terminal station, and escaped with his pocketbook containing $225.

MOTOR STARTS FIRE IN DOWNTOWN STORE

Fire said to have originated from an electric motor which operates an automatic electric sign at the W. A. Day Clothing company, 14 West Mitchell street, caused slight damage late Saturday night, according to fire reports.

In Memoriam.

Mrs. Willa Norris, who went away just one year ago today.

"AWAY"

I cannot say, and I will not say
That she is dead—she is just away.
With a cheery smile, and a wave of the hand.
She has wandered into an unknown land,
And you, O you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return,
Think of her faring on, as dear
In the love of there as the love of here:
Think of her still as the same, I say;
She is not dead, she is just away.
(Exiley.)

MRS. CARRIE NORRIS MOORE.

Springtime Blossoms Beckon Motorists To Habersham

Above: On the detour between Tucker and Lawrenceville. In the oval: Peaches among the apple blossoms in Habersham. Upper right: Dogwood blossoms in DeKalb.

By the old mill, between Lawrenceville and Buford. The Studebaker President in the foreground.

A bend in the road in north Fulton county on the Suwanee route to the hills of Habersham that now wear their beautiful coat of apple blossoms.

The old and the new. An antebellum barn built of hand-hewn timbers, and the Studebaker President, one of the big fine cars that makes motoring a sport as well as a pleasure.

Here's a Tip or Two to Help You

By O. J. WILLOUGHBY, Manager Constitution's Travel Information Service.

The orchards and woods are ablaze with color!

The wild dogwood vies with the blossoms of the Habersham apple orchards, and even the demure little violet is out in all her glory teasing you out into the open.

Go where you like, for wherever you choose there is a Constitution compiled Motorlog to direct you. Get them on week-days at The Constitution bureau, or any of the places listed herewith. (Perhaps the most convenient place to get one on Sunday is a Reed filling station. There's one near you.)

The trip suggested for today is one that would inspire the poet to song.

The map above gives the condition of the road at a glance. The distances and explicit directions will be found in The Constitution's Mountain Motorlog.

Should you go all the way to the "apple country" there are several routes that you may use, as shown on the map. The detour between Tucker and Lawrenceville is not bad when dry, neither is the clay portion of the route along the Southern railway through Suwanee, nor the unsurfaced portion of the route through Jefferson and Commerce, but the best wet weather route is to Buford through Roswell and thence through Gainesville, White Sulphur and Alto.

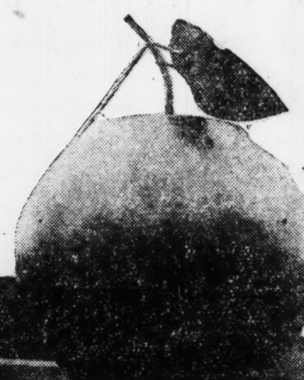

Should you want a shorter trip, and the roads be dry, a most pleasant afternoon can be spent along either two of the three routes to Buford—a total distance of 80 to 90 miles.

If you scorn the picnic basket, and nevertheless want to make a day of it, the Princeton and the Dixie Hunt in Gainesville, the Commercial House in Cornelia, the Mountain View Inn in Clarksville and many other hotels and cafes have killed the fatted hen, as well as her spring brood.

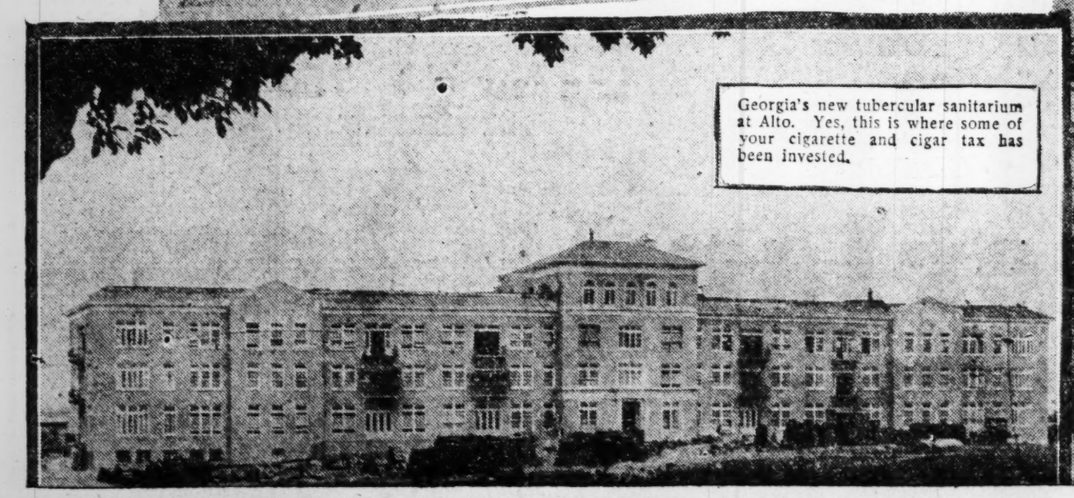

Let's go.

MAFFETT ORGANIZATION PRESENTS THE FALCON-KNIGHT

MAKERS' LATEST CAR OFFERED HERE BY POPULAR FIRM

New Six Cylinder Knight Sleeve Valve Engined Falcon Shown Here First Time Tomorrow.

BUILT BY OFFICIALS OF HIGH STANDING

Maffett Remains at Old Location and Announces No Changes in Policy or Personnel.

F. E. Maffett, one of the best known automobile distributors in the southern territory, today announces the Georgia distribution for the Falcon-Knight.

The Falcon-Knight is a six-cylinder car of moderate size and is in the $1,000 price field. The initial showing in Georgia opens at the showroom of F. E. Maffett, Inc., 67 West Peachtree street, at the beginning of business hours Monday.

Throughout the week their showroom will remain open evenings until 10 o'clock so that the friends and former customers of the Maffett organization may all have an opportunity of seeing the Falcon.

F. E. Maffett, president and active manager of F. E. Maffett, Inc., in commenting upon the change of product stated that the two principal factors which led him to seek the Falcon-Knight agency were the unmistakable trend of demand toward six-cylinder Knight-engined cars, and the fact that the officials of Falcon Motors, Inc., are all tried and true friends whose standing in the automobile field is of the highest.

WHIPPET '6' SHOWS UNUSUAL SPEED

The unusual speed and power development of the new Whippet six tends to bring about a revolutionary movement in the manufacture of cars in this classification, according to company officials who declare that the performance of this car has struck a remarkable response on the part of motor car buyers in all parts of the country.

Since its introduction in January thousands of orders have been taken for the Whippet six, its popularity resulting from performance values in tests made under every conceivable condition. These performances of speed, power, stability and sturdiness have placed the Whippet six in a distinctive class. It has shown a performance equal to that of many sixes in a higher price range.

The power development of the Whippet six has struck a new note for cars of this price class, showing an ability to climb the steepest grades in high gear, accomplished without a strain on the car, the engine at the same time remaining cool and functioning perfectly.

New owners of the Whippet six are amazed at the unusual speed development of the car, its fast pickup and getaway and the ease in which it is handled, especially in heavy city traffic. While high speed is not claimed, owners report speeds of 60 miles an hour or better and an ability to maintain it easily without working a hardship on the motor or car. It has shown remarkable response to any demand of the driver under the most adverse conditions.

The low center of gravity type of construction employed in the Whippet six is another factor that adds to its unusual performance. The weight of the car is carried close to the ground, thus providing a road stability and riding comfort not found in any other light six on the American market.

Spaciousness of the interiors is another feature of the Whippet six that has made a distinct impression on the motor car buyers. Ample roominess for the driver and the occupants is provided, assuring real comfort on long trips.

The four-wheel brake equipment, standard on all Whippets by Willys-Overland, provides an added safety feature. Such equipment is now looked upon by the majority of motor car buyers to be as necessary as the electric starter, which a few years ago had not been adopted by all cars as is the case today.

Willys-Overland officials see in the rising demand for the Whippet six a sales record for this car during the current year. Already the car building schedules for this model have been increased to meet the demand of buyers and dealers from all parts of the country.

100,000TH PONTIAC SIX TURNED OUT

Pontiac, Mich., April 9.—The Oakland Motor Car company's production set a new mark for the automotive industry to shoot at on March 28 when the 100,000th Pontiac Six rolled off the assembly line in the huge new plant at Pontiac, Mich., less than 15 months from the time car No. 1 was built.

In recognition of the company's achievement, not even remotely approached by any new car in the history of the industry, a brief ceremony was arranged at the factory. A. R. Glancy, president and general manager of the Oakland Motor Car company handed the key of the 100,000th Pontiac Six to Mayor Charles L. Rockwell, of Pontiac, who had christened the first Pontiac Six on January 4, 1926, less than 15 months ago. Several officials, including W. R. Tracy, vice president in charge of sales, and A. J. Brandt, vice president in charge of operations, were present.

"Completion of the 100,000th Pontiac Six was hastened by the heavy influx of orders for spring delivery," explained Mr. Tracy. "March production was increased from 14,000 to 16,000 Oakland and Pontiac cars in response to this increased buying, thus almost equalling last August's record production of 17,000. April's total will far outstrip all records in the company's history, being set at 22,000. This figure exceeds even the record production of August by 5,000 cars.

"There is a close relation between the recent announcement of the new and finer Pontiac Six at new low prices and the volume of Pontiac Sixes built during its very brief history," said Mr. Tracy.

"Pontiac Six No. 1, a two-door sedan produced less than 15 months ago, sold at $825 at the factory while Pontiac Six No. 100,000, also a two-door sedan, sells for but $775 at the factory The price reduction to the public being due directly to the manufacturing economies possible by volume production.

"The Pontiac Six met with an instantaneous acceptance by the public, which had long been waiting for a quality six-cylinder car at such prices. The unprecedented demand for the new car necessitated immediate and expensive expansion of Oakland-Pontiac manufacturing facilities, and these in turn are enabling the company to divert the savings of volume back to the public, in the form of numerous refinements and the recent substantial reduction in price.

"Absorption of 100,000 Pontiac Sixes in little more than a year after the car's introduction is significant, we feel. It is proof that the public is quick to appreciate a conscientious effort to give value for its money."

The reception accorded the new Pontiac models by the public accounts in part for the impetus given production this spring. There is indication that the Pontiac Six sedan will lead the line in popularity this season, and that both the new Sport Roadster and the new Sport Cabriolet—just added to the line—will find ready market. Both these models embody new features, including roomy two-passenger rumble seats with nickel trimmings.

WHEN THE CAR NEEDS A BATH

A closed car does not collect any more dust and dirt than an open model, but it looks much worse if it is not cleaned regularly. Considering the great increase in the popularity of closed cars, automobile cleanliness is today more important than ever.

Although some manufacturers give special instructions for washing the finish of their cars, a thorough knowledge of correct washing principles is desirable for every car-owner.

Washing an automobile is simple, yet the finish of many a car has been dulled and scratched by carelessness in washing. Never wipe off the dust or mud without first flushing off the car body with a stream of water. The water removes much of the foreign matter so that it cannot scratch the finish in later washing operations.

After flushing, go over the body with a sponge and a stream of water. Be sure that the water runs freely through the sponge to carry away the dirt. Wash the sponge frequently, and use it gently. Very cold or very hot water should not be used—a lukewarm temperature is better.

After the washing operation, a soft cloth or chamois should be used to dry the finish. Then a good body polish should be applied with a soft cloth or chamois.

Rancid butter is an effective agent for removing spots from the finish, as are vaseline and kerosene. Do not polish the nickel parts too often, as frequent rubbing with a polish tends to remove the plating. A good silver polish is the best thing to use on nickel, but generally the nickel can be kept bright by rubbing it with an oily rag. Remember to take particular pains in washing a new car, because the varnish and paint require time to season and are more easily injured than on an older car.

To remove grease and oil apply gasoline to the parts to be cleaned, and if dullness results, polish with linseed oil on a soft cloth. Mud and grease on axles and under the fenders can easily be removed by washing with suds made by dissolving two pounds of soap in a gallon of water. It is best to rinse the washed parts thoroughly.

RUBBERIB IS NEW BATTERY IMPROVEMENT

A patented feature which is unusually successful in lengthening the life and increasing the efficiency of storage batteries has just been announced by the Prest-O-Lite Company, Inc., of Indianapolis, according to M. J. Carroll, of the Battery Service company, local Prest-O-Lite distributors.

This new improvement, which has been tested for the past three years in Prest-O-Lite batteries used as standard equipment on Packard motor cars, consists of the use of sturdy, rubber-ribbed separators between the battery plates. Batteries containing this patented features are now on the market in the new Prest-O-Lite "Rubberib" storage battery for all makes of cars.

New Separator Big Feature.

"Three-fourths of all battery troubles in in the past have been due to the fragile nature of the separators, which wore out before the plates, due to the fact that no one had found a satisfactory way to reinforce them to withstand the friction which may result from two plates rubbing against a separator," declared Mr. Carroll.

"In the past," he stated, "efforts have been made to overcome this difficulty, but until the Prest-O-Lite Rubberib was invented no one had succeeded in so strengthening a wood separator as to make it possible for the separator to last as long as the plates.

Secret Process Used.

"The new Rubberib battery has separators of candled Port Orford cedar," said Mr. Carroll, "admittedly the best material for separator use. These are specially treated by a secret Prest-O-Lite process to increase their porosity and durability. They are then strengthened by triple reinforcements of hard, vulcanized rubber at the points which take the wear—and this is an outstanding improvement.

"In keeping with Prest-O-Lite's conservative policy, batteries of this new construction have been in use for three years without the knowledge of the public, and now at the close of this period of successful use, Prest-O-Lite announces that Rubberib batteries are available for all makes of cars.

Battery Used on Fine Cars.

According to Mr. Carroll, several other makers of fine cars, in addition to Packard, are also installing this new Prest-O-Lite development as standard equipment, and "wise motorists," he declared, "everywhere are buying Rubberib batteries because of their extreme long life and their greater freedom from battery trouble."

Atlanta, Ga., March 26.—At Lakewood oval, Chick Murray, piloting a Whippet stock touring car, today smashed the dirt track stock car record, covering the distance of 225 miles in four hours, forty-four minutes and thirty-seven seconds. An average of 47.7 miles per hour.

Atlanta, Ga., April 3.—Before the eyes of more than seven thousand spectators a Whippet stock touring car driven by Chick Murray roared up Stone Mountain, the world's largest rock, in the startling time of nine minutes and sixteen seconds. This is conceded to be the fastest and most difficult hill climb ever accomplished in this section. Murray followed successful climb by immediately descending from the ummit under the car's own power, demonstrating conclusively the effectiveness of modern four-wheel brakes.

Beauty Quacks Assailed

:: DR. FISHBEIN WRITES OF UNHAPPY VICTIMS ::

By Medical Authority

New York, April 9.—(United News.)—Monkey glands and monkey business performed by cosmeticians, weight reducers and quack surgeons are not only making monkeys out of American seekers after youth and beauty but are often losing them what health and beauty they started with.

This is the theme of a new book by Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the journal of the American Medical association.

When he got the material together from stories of dupes who sought help from the association, Dr. Fishbein took a look at it and named his volume "The New Medical Follies."

Some of the quacks who prey upon the million victims Dr. Fishbein estimates fall into their hands each year are earning up to $200,000 each annually, he asserts.

Some of the victims of "beauty" operations, he says, will carry unsightly scars for the rest of their lives.

Other patients of the cultists merely go through silly cants and maneuvers in the scramble for youth, beauty and vitality.

Of the practice of rejuvenation surgeons, Dr. Fishbein declares that threats of lawsuits involving sensational publicity forces patients to pay staggering fees, running into thousands of dollars.

"There is no fool like an old fool—particularly in matters of rejuvenation," Dr. Fishbein remarks in taking up this subject.

And these operations do not help the ancients, he says, quoting the European mental expert, Dr. Alfred Adler, who declares that the Steinach rejuvenation operation is useless unless accompanied by "mental therapy" which is rarely given in the American cases.

Dr. Fishbein tells the experience of a Chicago society woman who underwent an operation to remove scars on her neck left from an earlier operation.

"The woman had to be removed to a hospital in the midst of the cutting. When she was able to leave, the scars were more prominent than ever and her chin, due to contraction of the skin, was twisted to one side. She was ashamed to go home."

Even when such operations are apparently successful the improved appearance is temporary, he says. "A year, sometimes only six months, and the skin has sagged back again. This is a characteristic of the skin."

Of weight reduction, Dr. Fishbein warns that a slender figure is not possible to all types of women and that the effort to reduce jeopardizes health.

The book opens with an "encyclopedia of cults and quackeries" giving a brief description of the following healing cults:

"Aerotherapy, astral healing, autology, bio-dynamo-chromatic diagnosis and therapy, biological blood washing, chiropractic, Christian philosophers, Christian Science, Coueism, Dowieism, electrotherapy, Emmanuel movement, faith healing, erosionism, homeopathy, gland therapy, naprapathy, naturopathy, new thought, orificial therapy, osteopathy, sanatology, spiritualism, spectrocromists, telathermy, theosophy, vita-o-pathy, Zodiac therapy, Zonttherapy."

OLDS SALES SHOW STEADY INCREASE

A steady and consistent increase in retail sales of Oldsmobiles, indicating a banner spring busines, is reported by officials of Olds Motor Works. The deliveries to consumers for the first three months of 1927 have shown substantial gains over the same period of the two previous years, both of which were record-breaking years.

The record of retail sales of Oldsmobiles during the three 10-day periods of March, 1927, clearly shows that the trend of spring buying is well under way. The second 10-day period registered 45 per cent retail deliveries than did the first 10-day period, while the third 10 days of the month showed a gain of 16 per cent over the same period.

Additional evidence of the increasing demand for Oldsmobiles was contained in a telegram received at the factory from D. S. Eddins, vice president and general sales manager of Olds Motor Works, who is on the Pacific coast. His wire urged factory officials to speed California shipments and to increase production of roadsters and coupes, which are in special demand at this season on the coast.

Oldsmobile, with its nearly 30 years of continuous production, has in recent years been breaking all past sales records. In face of the largest sales in its existence in 1925 and again in 1926, the retail sales for the first quarter this year are 6 per cent greater than for the same period of last year and 71 per cent more than the first quarter of 1925.

CONTESTANTS NAMED FOR SPARTA SCHOOL

Sparta, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—A preliminary contest was held last night in the local school auditorium for the purpose of naming representatives from the Sparta public schools in the Tenth district meet to be held at Warrenton on April 22. Two young women contested for the honor in music, Misses Susanne Hattaway and Carrie Bell, Miss Hattaway winning the place.

Miss Mary Driskell won the place in recitation and Charles Dougherty in declamation. The school will not compete in the athletic events this year. Much interest is centered in the literary contest.

MARMON ANNOUNCES NEW BROUGHAM

A new four-door brougham on the Marmon eight chassis has been placed in production at the Marmon factory in Indianapolis, according to an announcement by H. H. Brooks, general sales director of the Marmon Motor Car company. This body type which will sell at $1,895, f. o. b. factory, increases the number of Marmon eight body styles to 11, four of which are custom built.

The new brougham will be available in color options that are particularly adaptable to that type of body, and interior fittings and upholstery will be the same as in the other standard Marmon eight closed cars. In beauty of appearance, the new Marmon eight brougham upholds the standards set by all body types in the complete Marmon line.

Daily production of Marmon factories continues to hold above 100 cars a day with company officials contemplating an increased output to meet the heavy spring demand from the entire distributive organization. Expansion in the Marmon sales organization since the first of the year has been an outstanding feature of 1927 automotive developments, nearly 300 new distributors and dealers having been added in less than three months.

THIRD POULTRY SALE IS HELD AT JACKSON

Jaskson, Ga., April 9.—(Special.) The third cooperative poultry sale of the season was held in Jackson Thursday, with farmers from all parts of the county bringing in poultry. The volume of poultry offered was not as large as at the previous sales, owing to the busy season on the farm.

Friers sold for 42 cents, hens and stags for 23 and turkeys for 30 cents per pound. A sale is planned for each month in the year.

WALKER CONTINUES SPEAKING PROGRAM

Continuing his speaking program over the state on agricultural and educational problems, Governor Clifford Walker will make four addresses at county seats next week.

The chief executive will speak at Ocilla in Irvin county, Monday; Ellaville in Schley county, and Butler in Taylor county on Tuesday, and Sparta in Hancock county on Wednesday.

He will be back at his office Wednesday afternoon, it was said.

SLOW-POKE MAY BE AS DANGEROUS AS THE SPEEDER

"From several different sources, notably the Pennsylvania state highway commission and the traffic committee of the Chicago Association of Commerce, comes information that tends to indicate that 'the problem of keeping automobiles from going too fast, once the chief concern of traffic operators, will share importance with the problem of keeping them from going too slowly,' says E. B. McCoy, of the Reo Sales & Service, Inc., local Reo distributors.

Mr. McCoy went on to say that both reports stated that the high "slow-poke," as well as the speeder, is responsible for accidents, and that safety is best achieved when uniform speed in the traffic lane makes it necessary for the fast driver to "cut around" the slower one.

"Recent investigations by the Chicago Association of Commerce's traffic committee cite the '10-mile-an-hour-dragger' on '20-mile-an-hour' roadways as the cause of traffic delays and accidents," he continued.

In explaining the idea, Mr. McCoy said: "Capacity of a highway, these investigations tend to show, is materially decreased, while the likelihood of accident is greatly increased, by the exceedingly slow driver. A uniform speed of 20 to 25 miles an hour in the traffic lane has been found to produce the greatest road capacity, or, in other words, a highway can accommodate more automobiles when all are traveling at this speed. The driver who goes more slowly than this, lowers the efficiency of a highway, it is claimed."

WAYNESBORO TO HEAR JUDGE MARCUS BECK

Waynesboro, Ga., April 9.—(Special)—Judge Marcus W. Beck of the Georgia supreme court will deliver the commencement address for the Waynesboro high school in June it is announced.

The new auditorium will be ready for the commencement season and the graduating occasion will be a gala one for Waynesboro.

SALES RECORD SET BY CADILLAC DEALERS

The Cadillac Motor Car company's sales to dealers in the month of March 1927, established a new one-month record for the company, according to a statement by L. P. Fisher, president of the organization.

March shipments of Cadillac and LaSalle cars were 29 per cent larger than the previous record month which was made in March, 1926. This new record was partly due to the introduction of the LaSalle, and partly to increased Cadillac sales throughout the country. Mr. Fisher states that the immediate acceptance of the LaSalle by the public has caused the factory to increase its April schedule, and that he is anticipating an increase in production and sales in April over March.

Since the introduction of the new Cadillac companion car, March 5, reports from dealer and distributor showrooms throughout the United States are the most enthusiastic ever to mark the first showing of a new car by the Cadillac company. Complete public acceptance has been reflected in the sales volume far greater than was anticipated.

GOLD STAR DRIVE IS ON IN HANCOCK

Sparta, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—A committee from the local chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy is canvassing the city soliciting funds for purchasing gold star medals from the Stone Mountain Memorial association for the remaining living Confederate veterans in Hancock county. There are only nine veterans left and it is proper to give each one the gold medal of honor which has been prepared by the association.

It is thought that the funds will be raised without difficulty and the models will be presented on Memorial day, April 26. The chapter is preparing to celebrate this event with a program at the Sparta school auditorium.

TWO COUNTIES BUILD HOMERVILLE HIGHWAY

Waycross, Ga., April 9.—(Special.) The commissioners of Clinch and Echols counties have signed an agreement for the construction of a highway from Homerville to Lake City, Fla.

Under this agreement Clinch county will grade the highway from Fargo to the Florida line. Echols county will reimburse Clinch county at the rate of $2,000 per mile. It is estimated there will be five miles in Echols county.

Actual construction has already been started.

Bailey is in a position to keep the line in excellent condition and already new phones have been installed.

Mrs. W. M. Keady, of Norcross, county chairman, is anxious that every living veteran be enrolled. Mrs. W. L. Brown is chairman of the Lawrenceville committee.

The beautiful gold-plate medal has been presented to the following living veterans in the Lawrenceville district, and their names will be entered in the special "gold star section" of the Book of Memories in the Stone Mountain Memorial hall: W. E. Simmons, J. P. Biggers, T. A. Barker, J. P. Webb, Sam C. Poe, W. F. Maxey, J. W. Langley, A. H. Holland, G. W. Boss, D. M. Clower, H. T. Ethridge, J. R. McKelvey, J. W. Cates, J. A. Bailey, J. P. AUTO RANKS THIRD IN EXPORT BUSINESS

Paying almost six billion dollars a year in wages to three and one-half million persons, yielding $700,000,000 in taxes and ranking third in the value of its exports and first in the value of its products, the automobile industry has developed from production in a few scattered machine shops to a factor of first economic importance. Much of the present prosperity of the United States can be traced to its time-saving value in business and its contribution to the social welfare of our people. Its condition is coming to be commonly accepted as the index to general business conditions. The spectacular and yet substantial growth of the industry during a brief 30 years has exerted a stimulating effect upon all business.

Registrations in 1895 indicated that a total of 300 persons throughout the United States purchased motor cars. Since that time each year has seen the number increase until, during 1925, it reached 4,336,754, with 4,500,000 indicated for the final returns of the year just passed.

According to figures of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, approximately seven and one-half per cent of the total United States exports consist of automobile products. Valued at $355,434,000 they rank third, yielding place only to raw cotton and to refined mineral oils.

The increasing complexity of our modern social and business existence has been accompanied by the development of the automobile from an expensive luxury to the point where it has taken its proper place as a part of our transportation facilities. Formerly looked upon as a competitive factor by organizations using older methods of transportation, it is today welcomed and used as a supporting, supplementing and cooperative unit. More than 50 railroads in the United States and Canada are now using motor trucks to supplement their shipping service; and nearly as many more are availing themselves of the motor bus.

As a social factor, the influence of the motor car is too evident to require extended comment. The wall erected around congested cities by lack of transportation has been destroyed. The population spreads out fan-shape. A great impetus has been given to healthful suburban living. The herding of great masses of humanity in over-crowded centers is no longer necessary. A population on wheels is as mobile as an army in the air.

While the growth of this industry has in a way been made possible by the manufacturing genius of this industrial age, it has at the same time directly contributed to improved manufacturing methods. Quality maintenance combined with large scale production has been an important result of such phases of manufacturing as standardization, interchangeability and accuracy in foundry practice, all of which have seen their highest development within the automobile industry. The adoption of power-driven hand tools is a comparatively recent development. While the resulting economies have been less spectacular than those coming from the use of giant presses, multiple drills and other automatic machinery, these small power-driven bolt and nut tighteners are among the devices by which manufacturers have yearly improved quality without increasing cost. Such tools as these, new and efficient mechanical power conveyors and a scientific routing of parts and materials through the plant are all important factors in increasing the output per man, and at the same time facilitating supervision for the maintenance of quality.

Every road improvement invites a new use for motor cars. For those who desire to tour in summer temperatures during the winter months, the south is prosecuting an intensive highway development program. Even in the most northern states in every progressive section snow-removal assures year-'round touring on roads free from ice and snow. New commercial uses for cars are almost daily evolved. Cross-country touring is every year becoming more popular and the many new family uses for cars are indicated in the constantly growing number of families which possess two or more cars. The growth of the automobile business has directly contributed to the growth of the railroads; and future developments in other lines of American industries will likewise increase the use of motor cars.

SPORT ROADSTER ADDED TO PONTIAC LINE

With the introduction of a sport roadster to the new Pontiac Six line announced last week, there has entered the low-price field a type of automobile which hitherto has been associated with only the more expensive makes of cars. This new body type added to the line is in every sense a sport roadster—with all the equipment, smartness, color harmony and dash that has been deemed essential to this outdoor type of motor car.

It has seating capacity for four adults, a rumble seat in the rear, easily opened and easily reached, giving the extra carrying capacity for two persons. The car coloring of Lucerne blue duco, striped with Faerie red, is as distinctive as the rakish body lines.

The upholstery is of shark grain leather and deep side pockets are provided in both doors. Nickelplating is used in the hardware of the car. The windshield arms are nickelplated as are the rear deck bars and the rumble seat side arms, door handles and interior hardware. The rumble seat is entered by means of two aluminum steps on the right side of the car, one on the frame and the other mounted on the fender.

Some of the unique features include the inside door handles which are placed toward the extreme front of the doors to be easily accessible; the outside door handles, which are inlaid with imitation mother-of-pearl; and the head and cowl lights which are finished in the same duco color as the body of the car. The spare tire is neatly carried on the left front fender. Automatic windshield cleaner and rear view mirror are standard equipment.

When the rumble seat is used the entire top may be removed or the back curtain may be raised or taken off altogether when the top is up. A glass window inset in the back curtain is framed in aluminum.

This car reflects all the many improvements of the new Pontiac Six line, longer and lower bodies, deeper radiator, larger, heavier and more sweeping crown fenders and more massive headlamps. The beading slopes down at the back of the sport roadster to conform to the graceful slope of the rear deck.

One of the unique features of the car is the new tilting-beam headlights which are controlled by a switch on the floor boards. This switch, which is most simply operated by the foot, either throws the beam down on the road for city driving or night—without dimming the intensity straight ahead for country driving at of the light. A 17-inch steering wheel with aluminum spider is another refinement to the Pontiac Six line. Other new mechanical features include new transmission and brake levers, a clutch even more smooth and positive in action and an oil-seated universal joint. The car lists at $775 f.o.b. factory.

At the present time, the factories at Pontiac are being extended to produce the number of Pontiac Sixes demanded throughout the country.

SPECIAL PLATING ON OLDSMOBILE BOLTS

Cadmium plating is being used by Oldsmobile on all external bolts, nuts, washers and screws to prevent rust spots forming. This latest improvement, which has just been placed in production, is another of those features Oldsmobile engineers have perfected to improve the appearance and add to the life of Oldsmobiles.

The cadmium used for the plating is a white, malleable, ductile metal found in the comparatively rare mineral greenockite. One of its principal uses heretofore has been the manufacture of amalgam for teeth-filling. It is rust and corrosion proof and, being comparatively soft, it does not crack as would a hard plating when the bolts and screws are tightened by hard and sharp tools, such as screw drivers and wrenches.

In the past it has been the general practice in the industry to enamel or nickle the screws, bolts, washers and nuts used to fasten the fenders, dust aprons and tire carriers to the body of the car. Under this former method there was a tendency for the enamel or nickel to crack and chip off, leaving a space of bare metal on which rust quickly formed.

Just a year ago Oldsmobile engineers, in cooperation with General Motors corporation experts, perfected chromium plating for radiator shells and bumpers. Chromium plate is smooth, has high blue-white luster, is rust proof, practically non-scratchable and does not require polishing. While chromium plating has an extremely hard surface, and cadmium plating is about as soft as lead, each efficiently serve their respective purposes in prolonging Oldsmobile car life by resisting of corrosion.

An indestructible composition that closely resembles mahogany is now being used for handles on Oldsmobile gear shift levers. The new handles are made mushroom shape instead of round, improving the appearance and fitting the hand better.

BIG ROAD PROGRAM PLANNED IN CUBA

Sweeping across the island of Cuba from Pinar del Rio on the west, through the cities of Havana, Matanza, Santa Clara and Camaguey to historic Santiago de Cuba on the southeast, a great central concrete highway of more than 620 miles in length has been ordered by the government which will connect both ends of the island and link the principal cities in a gigantic good roads chain. It is predicted that this highway will result in a tremendous economic and agricultural development.

Contracts for this project have already been let to a Boston contracting firm and work will start shortly. Specifications for the central highway show that it will be twenty feet in width, except through cities where it will broaden out to twenty-six feet. The base is to be of concrete six inches thick and the surface of asphalt or other similar material five inches thick, except where granite blocks are used.

The central project is only part of the work planned on Cuban highways. In addition, the government has authorized that more than 2,500 miles of good roads shall be completed before 1935.

These supplementary roads will be chiefly improved dirt roads, though parts of them will be hard surfaced. To pay for this program the government expects to spend over $75,000 000, to be paid for out of taxes levied under the public works law.

In connection with this vast program the secretary of public works of Havana recently placed with the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car company an order for six series 80 touring cars, in cruiser gray with her stripings. These distinctive automobiles will be used by Cuban officials in overseeing the work on the highways.

The order was obtained by Cardway of New York, international distributor for Pierce-Arrow.

factory, was for a long time vice president of Dodge Brothers. Mr. Maffett maintained a close association with him in this connection for about seven years. F. H. Akers, sales manager of Falcon Motors, was formerly director of distribution for Dodge Brothers. R. N. Harger, vice president and director of advertising, was formerly advertising manager of Dodge Brothers. John N. Willys, one of the outstanding men in the automobile industry, is a large Falcon shareholder, but will continue to give his time to Willys-Overland and other interests.

Mr. Maffett has announced that he will conduct his Falcon business from the old location, and that no changes have been made in the department heads of his organization, other than the appointment of a specially trained Knight motor expert as shop superintendent.

A stock of parts arrived simultaneously with the first shipment of Falcon automobiles and Mr. Maffett states that he is now ready to render prompt service on his new line, even in the case of wrecks. This step was deemed wise in that he will be prepared for any service emergencies that might arise, and, that dealers now being appointed throughout the state will be able to draw from the Atlanta parts stock.

The new Falcon plant is said to be one of the best equipped in the industry and is capable of volume production from the start. The Georgia allotment is said to be as great as that of any new car ever introduced and Mr. Maffett states that he is now arranging for representation in all of the principal points throughout the state.

Brief Specifications.

Motor: Seven-bearing, Knight sleeve valve, with cubic inch displacement of 157.6 and developing 45 horsepower. The pistons are special light weight grey iron with three rings. Lubrication is by full pressure force feed and splash. Cooling is by pump with water jackets completely surrounding cylinder heads—thermostatic control.

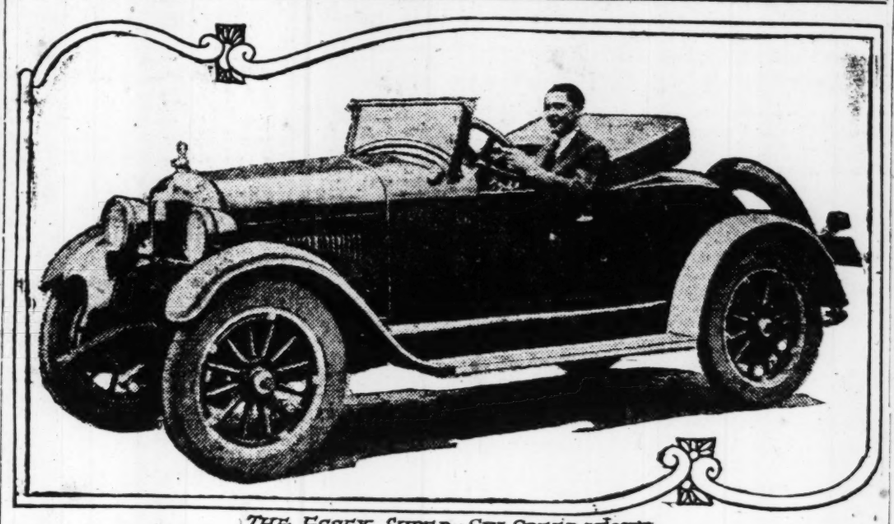

The clutch is Borge & Beck single plate type and is built in a unit with motor and transmission. Starting and lighting is two unit, with 142 ampere hour battery.

The drive is through two oil-tight universals and tubular shaft. Rear axle is semi-floating, permitting removal of shafts without dismantling other parts.

Bendix four-wheel mechanical brakes are used. Springs measure 86 1-4 inches on each side of car, and snubbers are used in front. The frame is 4 1-2-inch pressed steel channel, with wide flanges; 30x5 balloon tires are standard equipment. Two tapered roller bearings are used on each steering spindle to insure easy steering and to eliminate the usual "king pin" replacements.

Metal and wood bodies of marked roominess and good appearance are features of the closed designs, now on display here.

ARE WOMEN DRIVERS AS CAREFUL AS MEN?

Are women drivers less careful than men? Do they get into more accidents while at the wheels of automobiles?

The question has been under general discussion in the United States recently because of a widely reported statement from a German professor that in his experience women were mor liable to automobile collisions than men.

Officials at the Chrysler corporation factories are on the side of the women in this matter.

"From all the reports that reach us about performance of our cars in the hands of their owners—and we get a great many of them—there is only one answer possible from our point of view to the question," said J. W. Frazer, sales manager of the Chrysler Sales corporation, "so far as Chrysler drivers are concerned, women do not meet with any disproportionately great number of accidents.

"The reason is plain to our minds. It is found in the exceptional driving characteristics of the Chrysler car, in its unusual ability for quick getaway and quick stopping.

"There are two main causes for automobile accidents—one is that a driver can not get out of the way of something that threatens to hit his car, the other is that a driver cannot stop quickly enough to avoid hitting something or some person with his car.

"If you have a car that can both start and stop quickly you will necessarily escape a very large number of accidents. And it is just these qualities of speedy acceleration on the one hand and quick and positive stopping on the other that gives assured ability to keep out of accidents to Chrysler drivers, and especially to women Chrysler drivers because of the exceptionally easy operation of the controls which govern starting and stopping operations."

BIG PEPPER CROP SEEN IN JACKSON SECTION

Jackson, Ga., April 9.—(Special.) Prospects for a bumper pepper crop in Butts county are the best in the history of the industry, E. B. McMichael, field agent of the Georgia Pimiento Canners, Inc., says. He points to the fact that all pepper beds have come up to a good stand, giving promise of an abundance of fine, stocky plants a little later.

Plants will be ready for transplanting within a few days and if the growers get the plants out in advance of the hot summer sun a good start has been made.

BUICK PRODUCTION PASSES 200,000 CARS

With production of 1927 models well past the 200,000 mark on April 1, the Buick Motor company is over 20,000 cars ahead of its best previous output record for this time of the year. According to C. B. Durham, vice president and assistant general manager, this new record was made possible by the partial completion of a $7,000,000 expansion program which was launched over a year ago and which materially increased the facilities of the plant.

Among the features of the program is the new, efficient unified assembly system which takes care of any normal output of Buick cars, which was planned and built by Durham and his corps of plant engineers. This assembly system is capable of receiving and assembling 225 tons of materials an hour, most of which are delivered to the line by a system of conveyors. The new crankshaft division, in which Buick crankshafts are finished and balanced, has also been completed.

Workmen are now building the new $5,000,000 gray iron foundry which will have a daily capacity of 600 tons of castings. It is expected that this unit will be in operation some time during the summer.

The present capacity of the plant is 1,200 cars a day. Car building has proceeded at or near this figure ever since the 1927 models were introduced, Durham says. At present production is 1,100 cars a day, the highest rate ever reached at this time of the year. The schedule was increased a hundred cars a day in March when it was found necessary to revise the original plans for the month, due to the demand for cars.

ATTENTION TO TIRES MEANS BIG SAVING

Many motorists now realize that just putting a tire on a car and not paying any further attention to it is much the same as operating an auto without a thought for grease or oil until serious trouble develops.

According to H. H. Jentzen, of the J. L. Carroll company, Firestone dealers in Atlanta, the way to get the most mileage and best service from tires is to have them looked over regularly and frequently.

Like the old adage about a stitch in time, a little care will often prevent serious loss of tire mileage.

The treads should be inspected for cuts and bruises, and any small repairs needed should be made promptly.

It is important to have the wheels aligned and the proper air pressure maintained, if the motorist is to get all the service he is entitled to from his tires.

Always use valve caps. Screw each one down tightly by hand. This will prevent air leakage and underinflation difficulties.

GOTHAM TO VIEW MECHANICAL BALLET

BY SAM LOVE

New York, April 9.—(United News.)—The Paris police will be pleased to learn that the forthcoming Sunday night production of George Antheil's symphonic opus "Ballet Mecanique" will be staged in New York.

When this modern successor to Beethoven and Bach got under way at his Paris premiere, excited residents of the neighborhood turned in a riot call and the gendarmes arrived to have their whiskers pulled by the arty combatants in the midst of a din of mechanical pianos, bass drums, xylophones, fire sirens and electric bells.

Expletives and neckties were shed freely in all parts of the hall, according to returning expatriates, and as placed to face the audience and a great blast of wind swept over the music lovers down in front. Many of them were personages. It is reported that Ezra Pound rose in his seat, his whiskers parted by the blast and raised an umbrella—a red one. It collapsed and the "ballet mechanique" shortly thereafter came to a triumphant finale with the entire audience on its feet or backs participating in the din.

This is the opus now in rehearsal for its American premiere at Carnegie hall Sunday night. It is scored for 10 pianos played by pianists, a mechanical piano presided over by Antheil himself. Eight xylophones, electric bells, klaxons, sirens, gongs, rachets, airplane propellers and other horrible devices including four bass drums.

The "Ballet Mechanique" is a controversial composition that has already shed both blood and ink. Some say it practically epitomizes this machine civilization. Others say it is just pure art and epimotizes nothing. Still others are of the opinion that if it's art, so is a Chicago municipal election.

Although Antheil composed the thing in Paris, he isn't a Parisian. He's a New Jersey boy from just across the river here.

As a quieting influence, Antheil has added his sonata to the premiere night program. It is a sonata for piano, violin and—drum.

Truitt, county agent, states that the second poultry car of the spring season will be operated through here next Wednesday under the auspices of the Georgia railroad and the state bureau of markets. The poultry industry in this county is growing rapidly since this market has been provided.

"Clear Brush Duco," New Finish Varnish, Perfected by DuPont

Clear Brush Duco, a transparent finish for which theer has been an insistent demand has now been perfecte dby the du Pont company, according to announcement Saturday by officials of the Sparks Paint company, local dealers in du Pont paints. Experiments an dresearch work to develop this new addition to the Duco line has extended over a long period of time. In all, more than 3,000 formula swere devised and results submitted to exhaustive tests in the company's laboratories before the quality sought for was obtained. In addition there were manp ractical tests by architects and painters, this in line with the company's puolicy of endeavoring to perfect a product before offering it to the public.

In this new product the effort has been to combine the valuable properties of Duco finishes for automobiles and household use with the very easy brushing and easy working qualities and the high luster of gum varnishes. Gum varnishes have been widely used for many years by the general public, and it was felt that a clear brush Duco should exhibit many of the properties of the gum varnishes, along with the quick-drying, which is characteristic of Duco finishes.

The combination of the glos sand luster of a varnish with the quick-drying of a nitrocellulose enamel is a new combination in a clear, fast-drying Duco, which can be brushed, although quite familiar in products which can be sprayed. It marks the beginning of a new era, in that it places in the hands of the householder a product which works easily, can be satisfactorily brushed under all conditions, and, therefore, makes it possible for the householder to revarnish many articles which are in daily use in the household. For one thing, it eliminates the tedious delays and the mishaps caused by freshly varnished floors an dfurniture. By the use of this new type, fast-draying, clear finish, the housewife way "varnish" her kitchen after the breakfast dishes have been washed and still be in a position to serve lunuch at the usual time. Clear Duco is for use on all interior surfaces.

Publix President Addresses Harvard Business Students

Students of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration listened recently to their first lecture on the theater business when they were addressed by Sam Katz, president of Publix Theaters Corporation, on the motion picture theater as a community institution and the development and future possibilities of chain or circuit theater operation.

After acknowledging his appreciation of the recognition of the motion picture business by the administrators of the George F. Baker Foundation and their courtesy in inviting him as a representative of the Publix Theaters Corporation to speak on the picture theater. Mr. Katz said in part:

"More and more is the motion picture theater becoming essentially a community institution, in the very best sense that the term implies. Every far-seeing person, whether engaged in the business or merely a patron, recognizes that a properly conducted theater is as important to a community as a school or church, for wholesome recreation and entertainment are among the essentials of modern community life.

The announcement that "Rogers goes to congress," was made by Sam E. Rork, motion picture producer, from his office in First National studios in Burbank, near Hollywood, Calif.

"I have signed Will Rogers as the star of a special feature production based on the stage success of "The Texas Steer,'" announced Mr. Rork. "Mr. Rogers will have the part of Maverick Branders, the Texas cattleman, who, against his wishes, is elected to congress."

"Weepy" Scenes.

Albert Gran is not only contributing the comedy relief in that important special "Seventh Heaven," which Fox is making, but as the old cabby Papa Boul, the guardian angel of the two sisters who come to Paris, he likewise has heart appeal. This week he has been doing some of those scenes of a "weepy" nature when he undertakes to drive the "wolf from the door" of the girls' apartment and makes a raid on a grocery store. The actor is nearing the end of this notable engagement, which makes his fifth picture on the Fox program.

The blind see and the maimed walk in the Court of Miracles. In keeping with the name, such miracles are nightly happenings there, for the Court of Miracles is the rendezvous of the beggars of the Paris streets, where the "blind" beggars remove their spectacles, the maimed unstrap their distorted arms and legs and hearing is restored to the "deaf," so that all may enjoy each other's company when the day's activity is finished.

Jackson, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—General farm work in Butts county is well advanced for the season, much corn having been planted and some growers are now planting cotton seed. The fine and thorough preparation made for this year's crop has been the subject of much favorable comment.

It is not thought that the cotton acreage in Butts county will be increased this season, while a large acreage will be planted to corn, peas, hay and other crops. The grain crop generally is looking well but the prospect is not altogether as favorable as it was last year, according to the declaration of well known farmers.

THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY FRANKLIN

FRANKLIN

Outspeeding the Industry in Sales Increase Over 1926

The best evidence of the impression the great 25th Anniversary Franklin has made is the way it has sold. Retail deliveries for 1927 to date, compared with 1926, are increasing faster than the industry's.

This outstanding popularity has two principal causes. One, the advanced smoothness of the car's power and speed, making the Franklin today as much of a joy to drive as it has always been a satisfaction to own. Second, the increasing desire for quality, as shown in growing fine car sales—plus the knowledge that Franklin's high standard has not changed.

Scarcely less important is the certainty that equal riding comfort, handling ease, and carefree dependability cannot be had elsewhere. And the unequivocal endorsement which aviation is now giving to Franklin's basic principle of air-cooling.

The motoring public is a group of experts today. They know what they want, and they know when they are getting it. The marked swing to Franklin in this year's fine car market should be all the invitation you need to examine and drive the 25th Anniversary Car.

All prices include full equipment, and are the most favorable in Franklin history. Ask about the 25th Anniversary Easy Ownership Plan.

FRANKLIN WINS ENDURANCE RUN

Carrying four passengers 898 miles through a mountainous region in which it was necessary to cross six distinct mountain ranges and traverse nine-tenths of the distance over unimproved roads, a three-year-old standard Franklin touring car finished first in the four-day efficiency and endurance run held recently in Uruguay, South America.

Only car among the 12 entries of British, French and American make, which carried full equipment from bumpers to top, hood and fenders, the Franklin was likewise the only car that finished without mechanical difficulty, suffering only one puncture on the sharp thorns that strew the sides of a mountain range.

The route was from Montevideo along the Plata and Uruguay rivers to Salto and return, branching off at Mercedes and running along the ridge of the Bizcocho mountains to Trinidad and Durazno, returning to Montevideo by way of Canelones. Thirteen hundred and eighty kilometers was the measure of the indicated route, 392 of which were to be traveled the first day, 275 each for the second and third days and 438 the fourth day. A self-imposed penalty of 58 kilometers extra was taken by the Franklin driver through losing the road at the far turn in the course.

Excepting approximately 100 kilometers, from Montevideo to San Jose the roads were unimproved, many of them mere ox-cart trails utterly impassable to automobiles save during the dryest season of the year.

The entries were divided into two classes according to piston displacement, those of more than 182 cubic inches' displacement (in which class Franklin fell) being required to clip off about one hour and thirty minutes from the time of the others in each day's trip.

Mr. Matias Fresendo, of the Buenos Aires Franklin dealership was operator of the car, being the third Franklin driver to come to the control posts in Montevideo winner in the classic Uruguay runs. A United States citizen entered two Franklins in the run of 1920, taking first and second places respectively.

INTEREST IN COACH TRAVEL GROWING

Evidence of the spread of motor coach travel and of the increasing popularity of this form of transportation is shown in orders received in the last few days from many sections of the country by the Yellow Truck & Coach Manufacturing company, of Chicago. This evidence is strengthened by the large proportion of "repeat" orders.

The west coast states are strongly represented in these orders. The Empress Taxi & Sightseeing company, of Victoria, B. C., is adding a parlor coach to its existing fleet of Yellow parlor coaches. The Spokane Yellow Cab company is also increasing its fleet of Yellow parlor coaches by the addition of another type Y parlor coach.

In Portland, Oregon, the Yellow coach fleet operated by the Portland Electric Power company, already numbering some 15 city service coaches, is to be augmented by seven more of the gas-electric type.

The City Railway company, of Los Angeles, is receiving three more 29-passenger type Z city service coaches, and four of the double-deck type are nearing completion. This company already has ten Yellow coaches in service.

In the mountain states the Colorado Springs and Interurban Railway company, of Colorado Springs, which is operating eight Yellow coaches, is ordering two more of the type X city service coaches.

The Louisiana Electric company has ordered three more of the 21-passenger city coaches to add to the service now rendered by a fleet of six Yellow coaches of a similar type.

In Oklahoma City, the Oklahoma City Railway company is buying four of the 21-passenger Yellow coaches to double the service which its present fleet is maintaining.

The Eastern Texas Electric company, of Beaumont, Texas, a Stone & Webster property, has purchased three 21-passenger city service coaches.

The De Camp Bus Lines, of Livingston, New Jersey, one of the oldest operations in the country, has ordered five of the 2 -passenger type Z Yellow coaches to add to the service already given by other Yellow coach units.

In Wheeling, West Virginia, the Washington Transportation company, which is operating several Yellow parlor coaches, is about to receive one of the 21-passenger city service Yellow coaches.

In Du Bois, Pennsylvania, the local traction franchise has been turned over to the Edwards Motor Transit company, which has been operating an intercity coach service. To serve the community of Du Bois, the Edwards company is adding two Yellow city service coaches of the 21-passenger type; and two parlor coaches, one of the 17-21-passenger capacity and one of the 29-passenger capacity, to meet increased demands in intercity service.

The Chicago and Alton railroad has placed an order for two type Z 25-passenger semi-de luxe type Yellow coaches which will be placed in service in the near future.

HUNTSVILLE BUILDS MANY RESIDENCES

HUNTSVILLE MAY BAR AIR RIFLES TO BOYS

Huntsville, Ala., April 9.—(Special).—A strong sentiment has been manifested in Huntsville for the elimination of air rifles since a serious accident occurred. Wallace Howard, a boy, almost lost an eye when shot with one of the guns. It is also claimed that the boys are shooting birds in the city with them.

AIR CONTROL SPEEDS UP AUTO PRODUCTION

The American automobile industry is reaching new strides in productive capacity while many millions of dollars in new economies are being affected through the positive, mechanical control and manipulation of air in a hundred different processes and functions, leading plant engineers in the industry declare.

The spectacular growth of the industry with its giant volume of mass production has been made possible by wide adoption of air control in all the important phases of manufacture and the value of controlled air has been translated into terms of lower prices, greater efficiency and higher quality of material and workmanship to the car buyer, these engineers assert.

"It has been the speed with which the industry has adopted important developments in science to facilitate production, protect health conditions of labor and reclaim material waste that has made it one of the most outstanding and spectacular in American history," the chief plant engineer of one of America's greatest motor car builders declared. "Advances in the science of air conditioning has made it possible to increase the production of plants several times over without increasing their size or buildings. This is true of all the big builders such as Ford, General Motors, Willys-Overland, Stearns-Knight, Chrysler, Nash, Studebaker and others."

While sistematic ventilation of all buildings plays a big part in the automotive industry, it is in a multiplicity of other applications that electrically controlled air is of vital importance to the industry and its thousands of workers. According to Arthur Sheldon, works manager of the Willys-Overland company, many states have laws compelling industry to protect workmen from dusts, gases, fumes and other by-products of manufacture but the motor industry has gone far beyond the letter and spirit of these laws to both protect its workmen and to increase productive capacity.

"Dust must be collected, shavings conveyed away, gases, odors and fumes driven out if production is not to be hampered and the lives and health of workmen protected," Mr. Sheldon said. "These objectionable dusts and other by-products result from grinding, polishing, sand blasting and other operations, and are all handled by air driven at great force by huge blowers and other air-control equipment.

"There is hardly a department in the Willys-Overland plant which does not have both an intake and exhaust air system for not only proper ventilation but for collecting all these gases and grist. Each system plays a different part but each effectively gives protection and speeds up the manufacturing processes. In the baked enamel shops, where explosive gases are easily formed, air is controlled by machinery to prevent these explosions. It is kept in motion and the gases driven out."

In the wood working shops an exhaust system is used to collect all sawdust, shavings, and wood-hog refuse and the blown air takes it over to the boilers where it is used for fuel. Many tons of solder are reclaimed each year because of uses of controlled air in the room where the radiators are dipped. The air not only collects the solder drippings and other muck but completely drives out the poisonous fumes which result from the soldering process.

Heated air dries new paint jobs on hundreds of car bodies within two hours where formerly it required days. Exhausting air in booths where bodies and parts are sprayed with paint carries away the dangerous pigments and other elements in the paint which formerly entered the nostrils of the worker and made production painfully slow.

In the block test room, where the finished motor is tested, an exhaust air system carries out the deadly carbon monoxide gas while another system brings in fresh air. In the assembly line, where scores of new cars are started off by drivers and give out clouds of white smoke, the air is safely handled and controlled. In the final assembly, a large room where many of the new cars are parked for driving tests, there is a huge air conditioning system. Controlled air is used as mechanical draft in obtaining greater fuel efficiency in the big furnaces.

Thus, both Sheldon and W. R. Ourand, chief plant engineer for Willys-Overland, are led to believe that practically all the former serious dangers to workmen's health, developed by some of the processes of industrial manufacture, have been eliminated by a sane recognition of the importance of clean, conditioned air and the fact that it can be scientifically controlled.

"There are few industries which have so effectively and elaborately capitalized the science of the air conditioning engineer for health protection and productive efficiency as the automotive," Ourand said. "The demand for more scientific ventilation or air conditioning is spreading rapidly, however, not only in industry but for schools, theaters, restaurants, hotels and even to the home."

TREMENDOUS INCREASE CHEVROLET DELIVERIES

A tremendous increase in retail deliveries of new Chevrolet automobiles throughout the country during the first two months of 1927 as compared with the same period of 1926 is shown in the following report compiled by the Chevrolet Motor company.

The magnitude of this increase is indicated in reports from 32 of the most important trading areas in the United States and shows an average increase of 97.4 per cent in these centers for the first two month of 1927 as compared with 1926.

The increase is striking evidence of the country-wide and constantly mounting demand for the Chevrolet car—a demand which caused the Chevrolet Motor company to reach a new high peak of production during February of this year of 85,821 cars—and still further marking the company's preeminence as the world's largest manufacturers of gear shift automobiles.

The New Falcon-Knight Coach Displayed by F. E. Maffett

Speed, power, smoothness and endurance, all of these are in the make-up of the new Falcon Knight. It will b introduced to the public for the first time Monday by F. E. Maffett, Inc. This is the first popular priced six-cylinder Knight car produced and its makers have eliminated none of the qualities of the higher priced popular Knight cars, but are simply offering it in a smaller type.

ESSEX'S NEW SPORT ROADSTER IS HERE

One of the most talked-of cars of the year—the Hudson super-six—is receiving a special showing at the salesroom of Goldsmith-Becker company, Hudson-Essex distributor. Now that the spring season is here, this car is repeating the hold on public attention which it scored when introduced the first of this year. Scores of motorists are looking over its interesting points.

"In appearance and value as well as performance," said Mr. Becker, "the brilliance of the new Hudson super-six is equaled only by the costliest cars. With the new Hudson you will never feel that the slightest effort is exerted by the motor in traveling as you wish, whether for short, swift spurts or sustained all-day runs.

Low Center of Gravity.

"You round curves safely, due to the new low center of gravity. You do not shimmy. At all speeds, it is the easiest and safest driving and riding car in Hudson history. It is simply superb. The super-six principle is freed to the limit.

"Yet with all its marvelous power, comfort and performance—unlike anything American motorists have known—it is economical to operate. On road trips we have averaged from fifteen to seventeen miles to the gallon of gasoline and the car was being newly broken in, having just come from the factory when we started.

Ease and Comfort.

"In all the new car does there is effortless ease. So perfect is its action and so unlike what one has been accustomed to in an automobile, that it is hard to describe it in words. The swift, smooth glide into motion—then to sustained high speed—then back to the soft, instantaneous stopping action of its four-wheel brakes—all are seemingly done without effort.

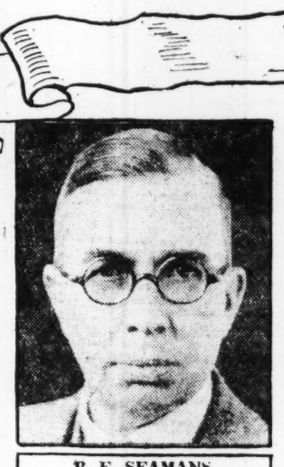

"One needs only to see the new Hudsons to appreciate their distinguished beauty and charm, but one needs to drive the car to realize why those who have had the experience unite in exclaiming: 'Nothing like it in the world.'"

The models now offered on the standard Hudson chassis include standard coach and four-door sedan, custom-built brougham, five and seven-passenger sedans, seven-passenger phaeton and custom-built roadster.

The F. E. MAFFETT ORGANIZATION
Falcon-Knight

AFTER an extended and painstaking analysis of the trend in automotive requirements—as expressed by the buyers of cars selling for $1,000 or more—WE ARE AS ONE MAN in the opinion that there is an unmistakable swing toward the car of six cylinders and the Knight sleeve valve engine.

We feel that you also demand economy, safety, flexibility, and above all, good appearance.

We find these factors ideally combined in the Falcon-Knight, and present it to you, with the conviction that it will speak for itself more eloquently than we can speak for it.

Come see it, drive it, and judge for yourself.

This change is only in the product we offer, and in the scope of our service. The Maffett organization and policy remain the same.

We shall continue to give you the same fair treatment that we would have you give us. Toward this end we have installed special Knight engine service equipment, appointed a specially trained Knight expert as shop superintendent, and placed a more-than-adequate stock of Falcon-Knight parts in our bins.

Hugh Hodgson and Class Present Lecture-Musicale

Hugh Hodgson and a number of his students gave a lecture-musicale at his studio Tuesday, the subject being the "Twenty-four Preludes of Chopin."

Mr. Hodgson opened the program with a brief talk dealing with the outstanding facts regarding Chopin as the composer. The "24 Preludes" are contained in Opus 28 and were written in the year 1839. This entire book was given on this program.

Mr. Hodgson prefaced each prelude with pertinent remarks, although brief in content, creating that atmosphere which enriched the value of the program. These lecture-musicales are given monthly, not as a performance but with the idea for study and development toward giving a clearer comprehension of a work in its entirety.

Those taking part on the program were Misses Marion Battle, Lucy McDormod, Katherine Howell, Louna McElwaney, Mary Adair Howell, Virginia Fortson and Caroline Gray; Mesdames Azalee V. Estes, Birdie E. Hirsh, Clifford M. Stoghill and D. L. Wood. It is difficult to single out the individual work because of the fact that each had mastered the technical demands and succeeded in portraying the central idea of the prelude as set forth by Chopin.

An impromptu feature of the afternoon was the artistic playing of Miss Glennis Hancock, of Marietta, who has just returned from New York. Master Stoghill also played several numbers by request.

At the conclusion of the program tea and sandwiches were served, Mrs. Frederick Hodgson assisting Mrs. Hugh Hodgson.

A higher standard of motive power in a lower priced car
FOR years the Knight sleeve-valve engine has been the motive power of Europe's finest cars—long regarded by both European and American automotive engineers as the superior type of motor.
Now modern American manufacturing methods make this fine power plant available to American motorists in the Falcon-Knight—the first Knight-engined car in the lower price range.
With a background of fifteen years of development in such fine cars as Daimler, Minerva, Panhard, Voisin, and others, the Falcon-Knight engine, designed for unusual power, flexibility, quietness and long life, sets a new high standard of motive power in the lower price, six-cylinder class.
The Falcon-Knight chassis throughout is constructed in keeping with the excellence of its power plant. Modern improvements include mechanical four-wheel brakes, seven-bearing crankshaft and oil rectifier, but these features are incidental to the importance of the Knight sleeve-valve principle.
Falcon-Knight cars in closed body types are now on display. We invite early inspection and an opportunity to arrange a demonstration.

CHRYSLER

Now 4th of World's Great Companies

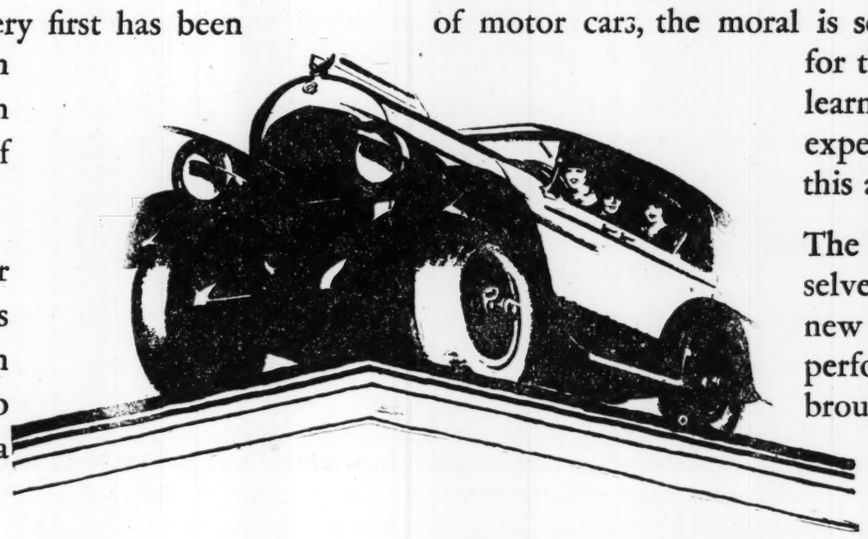

Swept past all but three in dollar volume by public endorsement

MOTOR car figures for the last six months of last year and the first few months of this, register an amazing reversal of public opinion.

After three years Chrysler has been swept by popular approval from 27th to 4th place—led only by one great independent manufacturer and by two units of a corporate group.

The Chrysler watchword from the very first has been emphasis upon quality rather than quantity—but quantity has rolled up in ever increasing volume as a result of this outstanding Chrysler quality.

In the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, after only three years of public history, Chrysler has been swept in recent months past all but two individual cars which are units in a corporate group of seven cars.

No such realignment has taken place since automobiles were first built; and yet the process is strictly in line with the public disposition to approve and admire individual initiative, to recognize and reward engineering progressiveness and valorous disregard for out-worn traditions.

Because nothing like it has ever happened before in the history of motor cars, the moral is so plain that there is nothing left for the discriminating buyer to do but learn through actual riding and personal experience why Chrysler has registered this amazing advance.

The four great Chrysler cars are themselves the strongest evidence of the new standards and new qualities of performance and long life which have brought about such an amazing readjustment in America's greatest manufacturing industry.

Four Distinct Lines of Chrysler Cars Won This Hold on Public Favor

Chrysler "50"
FIVE BODY STYLES
$750 to $885
50 miles and more per hour

In the Chrysler "50", Walter P. Chrysler and his corps of engineers, studying the field of fine and low-priced six-cylinder cars, strove to produce a four-cylinder car which would unmistakably advertise its greater value by its greater performance, greater sturdiness and greater long life.

In its 50-miles-plus per hour, 5 to 25 miles in 8 seconds, 25 miles to the gallon, they gave the public something immediate, something convincing, something final and conclusive with which to measure Chrysler "50" against and above anything around its class either in six or four cylinders.

Chrysler "50" has been overwhelmingly accepted by the public for what it was designed and built to be—the giant of its class in Standardized Quality, outstanding performance, full family size, complete appointment and every essential that makes for outstanding and indisputable value.

All prices f. o. b. Detroit, subject to current Federal excise tax.

Chrysler "60"
SIX BODY STYLES
$1075 to $1245
60 miles plus—with ease

Mr. Chrysler and his engineers, in designing and developing the six-cylinder Chrysler "60", set their hearts on a car which would in large measure advertise and sell itself.

They strove for a type and quality of road-ease and road-readiness and supreme comfort which would do its own talking—so that any man, woman or child could swiftly see that the "60" was a car among cars, unprecedented at its price and in its class.

They wanted the Chrysler "60" to settle all arguments by demonstration and by difference—and the extent to which it is dominating its own six field is an ambition splendidly fulfilled.

With such outstanding excellence in every phase of performance plus typically Chrysler smart appearance and complete equipment, it is surely not surprising that Chrysler "60" should be recognized as a value utterly unapproached by any other six of medium price.

All prices f. o. b. Detroit, subject to current Federal excise tax.

Chrysler "70"
EIGHT BODY STYLES
$1495 to $1795
70 miles plus—

Chrysler "70" seized and held first place in its dashing class from the first month of its appearance more than three years ago.

Mr. Chrysler and his engineers conceived a smart, swift, fashionable car which would be to the public a refreshing departure from previous conventional design.

It was the car conception on which they builded the Chrysler business, and not a day has since ensued that they have not striven to clinch its magnetic appeal to discriminating men and women.

Chrysler "70" is as new and as advanced over the ordinary car of today as it was three years ago—Standardized Quality reflects itself in every phase of "70" construction and "70" performance.

It is still pre-eminently the 70-mile-plus quality car of its class—vogue-established and value-established as unique, alone, and literally above competition.

All prices f. o. b. Detroit, subject to current Federal excise tax.

Chrysler Imperial "80"
TEN BODY STYLES
$2495 to $3995
80 miles plus—92 horsepower

The Imperial "80" is the fruit of Mr. Chrysler's conviction that the last word had not been spoken in fine car manufacture.

The American public has long since discovered that no matter how large a sum they may be prepared to invest, it is impossible to find elsewhere all that the Chrysler Imperial "80" offers in motoring luxury.

For the Imperial "80"—the supreme expression of Chrysler Standardized Quality—was designed and built for that market which sets no limit on price. It is all that the genius of Chrysler engineers could conceive to make a car as fine as money can build.

80 miles and more an hour, 92 horse power rendered fluid and flexible in a responsiveness signifying perfect mastery of both; an ease of riding that makes motoring comfort take on a new meaning—these are but symbols of the kind of luxury which Chrysler engineers have built into the Imperial "80".

All prices f. o. b. Detroit, subject to current Federal excise tax.

PRESIDENT'S WISE VETO.

The president's veto of the proposal of the Philippine legislature for a plebiscite on the question of immediate independence of the islands will no doubt be severely criticized by those politicians who capitalize the word "patriot," and also by those who make the most noise about "the justice of a referendum."

Viewed analytically and impartially, the president is entirely right, and his position is in the interest of the Philippine people and in the interest of a more stable, substantial government when Philippine independence is declared.

Following the Spanish-American war when this government, by treaty, assumed guardianship over the Philippine islands and the inhabitants, that great possession, outside of the port city of Manila, was practically uncivilized.

Here and there a "general," who was a government unto himself over a great mass of ignorant, naked or half-naked natives, or peons, had by occidental contact become civilized—Aguinaldo as an illustration—but in some of the islands there was little but savagery, and in the Moro group there was actual cannibalism.

Since the American possession all or most of these conditions have been supplanted by schools, churches, civilization and productivity.

The Filipinos showed themselves apt pupils, and following the series of internal rebellions for the first four or five years, the advancement of the people has been rapid and substantial.

In the meantime under Governor Taft, and the subsequent governors, culminating in the vigorous democratic tendencies of the present governor, Leonard Wood, the people have become more and more self-governing.

Today, with the exception of the administrative branch, they are entirely self-governing. They have their own provincial and municipal governments, their own legislature, and their own representatives in the congress of the United States.

As politicians developed in all sections, some of them widely separated in thought and policy, the demand for complete independence began to take root and to grow—not in the hearts of the masses, but in the ambitions of those who expected to participate as officials and as leaders in the independent government.

This finally reached and secured control of the legislature. Hence the recent resolution calling for a plebiscite on complete independence.

It is easy to understand that any "election," at present, held without American jurisdiction, could not under the pressure of nationalist influence from groups of politicians in each province be anything like a just or representative expression of the whole people. It would merely be a steam-rolling process in which the people would practically have no voice, and would, by disruption to the great farming and industrial interests of the islands, do the whole people a great injustice—and seriously hamper their material, educational and social welfare.

The very minute that the Filipinos as a united people are capable of self-government the United States should haul down its flag, first seeing that its treaty arrangements were mutually fair and satisfactory, stipulating a protectorate such as this nation continues to exercise over Cuba under the Platt agreement.

This action on the part of this government is a sacred obligation and must be strictly adhered to.

Until that time shall have arrived it is just as sacred an obligation that this government continue its administration with constructive, elevating policies such as it has always employed.

"IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE."

The pulling power of Constitution advertising has never been more forcibly illustrated than by the more than 60,000 citizens who literally stampeded the "Home Beautiful" exhibits Sunday and during the week-days since.

The units of these exhibits are located in four popular residential suburban developments.

Two of the units were built especially for this exhibit. Others run the gamut in valuations from $15,000 to $70,000.

The homes, representing the last word in modernization, are all beautifully furnished by Atlanta firms.

It is an educational feature, therefore, of tremendous appeal and value, sponsored by The Constitution exclusively, and given publicity only in The Constitution. Therefore from a "pulling" standpoint the results are traceable directly and exclusively to The Constitution.

The units are situated in Avondale Estates, Haynes Manor, Garden Hills and Argonne drive—all within different geographical sections of the city.

The exhibits opened Sunday and will close after today.

On the opening day the visitors to the Avondale unit numbered 17,800, to Haynes Manor 12,600, to Garden Hills 6,600 and to Argonne drive 5,300.

Since that time the week-day visitors ran the totals up far in excess of one-fifth of the entire population of metropolitan Atlanta.

Before the exhibits close it is expected that fully one-half of the people of the greater city will have visited one or more of these beautiful, modernly furnished, ready-to-go homes.

Such a record, perhaps never equaled before in this country, is an irrefutable evidence that while "advertising pays"—a business axiom that is proverbial—the pulling force of The Constitution as an advertising medium is without a peer.

BEATING THE "LOAN SHARKS."

The approaching first annual convention of the Credit Union League of Georgia emphasizes the constructive value and usefulness of the Georgia credit union law, which was enacted at the 1925 session of the assembly, and which was vigorously and earnestly advocated at the time by The Constitution.

Under this law ten of these associations, all confined to the employes of large industrial units except one, which is confined to postoffice and postal service employes, have already been organized with a total membership of 2,500.

Organization work among industrial operatives is progressing rapidly, and the splendid services being rendered, in taking care of the small but frequently imperative demands of distressed employes, can scarcely be measured in real value. They are emancipating such borrowers from the clutches of conscienceless "loan sharks," and in this respect are of inestimable value. In addition they are teaching thrift, home ownership, and good citizenship.

In this connection the good work of the Legal Aid Society, of which J. L. R. Boyd is counsel and executive official, cannot be too highly commended.

It is the foe of the money lender who preys upon the distress of laboring men and women of small incomes, and while this element of blood-sucking leaches has not been entirely eradicated, the loan extortion shark evil is rapidly diminishing through the activities of this organization.

At one time when Atlanta was literally infested with these sharks the exhorbitant and usurous "interest" exactions were placed directly on the face of the borrower's note, and the rates frequently ran to from 500 to 1,000 per cent a year

Then under an avalanche of public indignation the legislature passed "the small loan law" which prevented this, and placed the lender of small amounts, based on personal security, under regulatory laws, and made them accountable to the state banking department.

A large number of such personal lenders, and finance institutions, signed under the law, reconstructed their methods of operation, and are doing a legitimate business today.

On the other hand another group undertook to circumvent the law, and many of them have succeeded in doing so by the confederated-indorser system. That is to say, using an actual case as an illustration, the borrower of $15 is made to provide a stipulated "indorser"—who is occupying an adjoining office—which indorser in turn charges $4 for each 30-day indorsement, or an "interest rate"—not only usurous but barbarous—of $48 a year on a $15 loan, this plus the legal rate, and in consideration of personal collateral covering several hundred dollars worth of furniture.

In the actual case in question as reported in today's Constitution, the borrower defaulted in his payments, and under a trover execution the borrower's house was stripped of all its furnishings, leaving not even a bed to sleep upon.

In this and in similar cases the Legal Aid society, through Attorney Boyd, stepped in and instituted litigation that restored these household goods to the owner.

The case is cited merely as an illustration of a situation that challenges every citizen of Atlanta to cooperate with the society in the good work it is doing in order that these human blood suckers may be controlled.

FOR PUBLIC HEALTH.

Georgia stands within two or three states of being at the bottom of the list among the 48 states of the union in support of public health.

Every state that touches Georgia, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama and Florida, stand well up toward the top.

It is a shame, and a challenge to the legislature.

Health work is a great economic necessity.

The conservation of human energy is of the most important material undertakings.

When Georgia neglects to do her duty in public health she neglects to do that which is pressing as a welfare issue, and more pressing as a business issue.

Legislators should study and analyze the situation, and arise to their opportunity.

THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

In this issue is a communication from Dr. Charles O. Jones, state superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Georgia, setting out the political program and activities of the national organization.

The author refers especially to a reference made in The Constitution to the fact, as officially given out in the national headquarters, that $13,000,000 had been collected and spent by that organization in the past six years.

Reference to the official statement issued by Wayne B. Wheeler, the general counsel, has in fact been startling to the entire nation, and several members of congress, even from among those who profess to be "dry," hold that a congressional investigation of the political activities of the national organization will be asked when congress convenes in December.

It will be recalled that the Reed committee investigating alleged primary corruptions in Pennsylvania disclosed that the Anti-Saloon league had spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in that state in 1926 to have former Governor Pinchot nominated to the senate. While Dr. Jones refers to the Pennsylvania primaries and to the $5,000,000 total spent for various candidates, the Anti-Saloon league was as deep in the mud as either Pepper or Vare in the mire, except that the sum total spent did not amount to so huge a figure, although it was enough to prove a violation of the corrupt practice law. In that case at least it is a case of the pot calling the kettle black.

In a nutshell, the Anti-Saloon league is not only a political organization seeking to control elections of individuals by great expenditures of money, but it is notoriously a republican organization that seeks by the same token to control the votes of members of congress. It has even been charged that the expenses of one entire congressional committee have been paid by it. It goes further and reaches with its arbitrary tenacles into the very interiors of governmental departments. It is known of everyone that the recent appointment of Roy Haynes to head the prohibition enforcement bureau was dictated by General Commander Wheeler.

One of the most reprehensible and revolting features of the Anti-Saloon league's offensive and officious activities is the fact that its guiding spirit, Wheeler, sits, like a pro consul, in the galleries of congress with thumbs up and down on pending legislation, thereby dictating as one man and influence how members, representing their sovereign states and districts, shall vote. It is a reflection upon the intelligence of those who watch the turn of his thumbs, but the threat of huge sums of money to be thrown for or against their reelections intimidates and browbeats until they too often yield. It is a menace to popular government.

It is difficult to differentiate between a "dry" and a "wet," when a political "dry" is referring to either, or both. The fact is, the prohibition laws are not enforced, nor is enforcement as efficient today as it was in 1920, or even five years ago. Conditions are getting worse despite the enormous levy upon the taxpayers of this country to keep the government agency going, and upon the poor people—as a rule—of the country to keep the Anti-Saloon league going. The Constitution wants to see prohibition enforced. It does not want to see a mockery made of constitutional provisions.

The Constitution believes in law enforcement and in such reasonable laws as can be enforced.

As it is the morals of the nation are seriously jeopardized by non-enforcement, and every reasonable person knows it. No right-thinking person wants the saloon back. But no right-thinking person wants a continuation of the present enforcement farce.

AN IMPERATIVE OBLIGATION.

The most important and imperative obligation that the Georgia legislature of 1927 owes to all the people of the state is a revision of the laws governing banks and trust companies, by which depositors and security holders may be at least reasonably guaranteed against losses—and by which the scutling of such institutions may be prevented.

In the light of what has occurred in Georgia in the past 18 months it is an obligation that the citizens of this state demand shall be met and met right, despite any protests, organized or otherwise, that may be submitted.

In 1923 there was submitted to the legislature "an act regulating trust companies" that was prepared by Carl N. Davie, attorney for the state banking department, at the instance of the then superintendent, Mr. Bennett. It had the indorsement of the Georgia Bankers' association, which is an organization of the larger banks, but not of the Georgia Country Bankers' association, which was composed at the time of approximately 100 small chain banks, belonging to the Bankers' Trust company system, and others. The bill was vigorously fought by the latter institution, one of the officials of which took charge of an organization to defeat it. It did not even come to a vote. The opposition was so vigorous and well organized, with the group of rural banks touching almost every county, that even the proponents of the measure did not insist upon its passage.

Had that bill become a law the disaster created by the failure of the Bankers' Trust company and its chain of banks, entailing millions of money losses directly upon innocent depositors in all sections of the state, would have been averted.

It would have become a law but for the political interferences of that, and of its allied institutions. It is a blot on the records of that assembly that selfish and ulterior motives were permitted to defeat a measure, leaving depositors in privately-operated bank and trust companies at the mercy of speculators and bank looters.

The 1923 measure would have prevented not only the Bankers' Trust company but other companies operating in Georgia from collapsing.

It provided safeguards in capital organizations, and in the investments of such capital, with rigid restrictions.

The same or a similar measure will no doubt go before the approaching assembly and the restrictions should be extended to exclude any officer or director of a bank or trust company from borrowing from his own institution any of the funds, directly or indirectly, personally or through a corporation.

It will be recalled that the Bankers' Trust company issued participating certificates without limitation. The measure would have prevented this. It would have also given power to the state bank superintendent to remove any officer of any institution when any act of dishonesty, or even of recklessness, should be disclosed. Had this been the law in 1924, and even as late as 1925, millions of dollars could have been saved depositors in Georgia.

The members of the legislature should study and analyze this bill of 1923. It can be amended and strengthened to advantage in the light of recent experiences, but on the whole it is strong and sound.

Some such law, with every possible protective fortress, must be enacted in 1927. If not—if there is a recurrence of the fate of this bill in 1923, and of the influences that led to its defeat, the responsibility will be upon the assembly.

Chicago has stirred up an international debate on the question of its sewage disposal by using too much water from Lake Michigan through the canal to the Illinois river, thus lowering the chain of Great Lakes. "What shall we do with the sewage?" she asks her critics. Hope she doesn't dramatize it.

The Florida legislature always fetches a lot of lobbyists to Tallahassee. There they call them loblollyists, undoubtedly as they pine for certain relief or the defeat of some bill.

Back in the '80s when a man died with his boots on he was a bad, very bad, hombre. Now he is merely a pedestrian.

The trouble between the soft coal miners and operators will be settled, as usual, by the public at about $1 the ton.

LOOKING AND LISTENING

BY SAM W. SMALL.

What Georgians Are Asking About and Hoping From Governor Hardman

While recently recuperating down in Florida for eight weeks the writer talked with hundreds of Georgians now living in that state, or who were visiting there for various reasons. There was scarcely one of them who did not, at some point of the conversation, put the question:

"What sort of governor is Dr. Hardman going to make?"

That seems to be a prevalent question all over the home state as well. Daily inquiries by mouth and letter are made by persons who are concerned to know the manner of man Dr. Hardman, our governor-elect, is and what may be reasonably expected from him in the way of leadership and a progressive administration of the state's affairs.

This interested curiosity betrays more clearly than did the primary campaign last summer the general feeling that the condition of public affairs in the state are not satisfactory and very substantial reformation of them are wished for.

Invidious, but illuminating, comparisons that have been made between the advancements made by other states in the south and the slow and ragged record that has been made in Georgia, have stung the pride of our citizens and led them to declare for a new and better order under a new administrator.

Hardman Is Like That.

All through the preliminaries of the first primary and the hot times between it and the Hardman-Holder runoff, practically all that could be claimed for or charged against Dr. Hardman, either as a private citizen or a public man, was published to the people of the state.

The finale of it all was his nomination by a handsome majority and his election as a matter of course.

There is no need here to concoct a new biographical sketch of Dr. Hardman. He is as widely known to his fellow-citizens as any other public man of the state. They know that he is a man of matured life and seasoned experience in the activities of good citizenship.

And in all of those activities, personal or public, he has shown common sense, business ability, reliable judgment and, above all, an unselfish zeal for the common welfare.

Dr. Hardman possesses many forms of knowledge that will be of high value to the people when applied in the administration of their affairs. Added to that he has, since his election, undertaken to inform himself thoroughly of what has been accomplished, and what is now being done, in other southern states to improve government and advance the common welfare. With good health to brace him he will enter upon his official duties fully prepared to assume and carry the burdens of great responsibilities.

A Statesman's Opportunity.

No one since the restoration of Georgia to statehood in 1870 has taken up the duties of her governorship in a day more important and fateful for her present and future interests.

Governor Hardman will face the greatest opportunity that ever challenged the loyalty and labors of a statesman.

The people of Georgia need and want open work, economical and efficient government.

They are dog-tired of having their affairs batted around by political basketball players. They have seen the most important interests of the state man-handled and traded with by small-bore sectional politicians with personal or local axes to grind, while the larger and common interests of the people have been neglected or perverted.

It is too notorious to need specification that Georgia has made less progress along modern governmental lines since this century began than any other state in the entire south.

That sounds like a hard saying, but it is a true one that can be proven by any impartial comparison.

Governor Hardman will have the chance in his inaugural address to the general assembly and the people to show that he has a broad and statesmanlike grasp of the conditions of the state and the business and expedient means necessary to improve them, to bring them up to the front line of modern methods of administration, to remove the inequities of public burdens, to equalize the benefits of government, and to enforce justice and observance of law and public order.

Make Georgia Safe to Live In.

No interest of the people of Georgia is greater and more precious than their rights to life, liberty, and prosperity. They have suffered poverty, oppression, persecution, robbery and debt, but have survived them and regained their powers of self-determination of their internal affairs.

But when they fall into the ill fortune of having elected public administrators who neglect the weightier matters of government to practice personal and petty politics, allow the public service to become truculent and inefficient, permit the public money to be misused and wasted, and the proper protection of life and property to be inadequate, they experience wrongs and burdens scarcely less than those of alien imposition and from which they wrested their freedom nearly sixty years ago.

Governor Hardman knows that the people of Georgia are lovers of law and justice. He is himself a high exemplar of that sort of citizenship and for that reason, as largely as for any other, the office of chief magistrate of the commonweath has been given to him.

The general mass of his fellow-Georgians will be bitterly disappointed if they do not hear from him, when he takes the oath of their governor, a ringing declaration of his purpose to protect and defend the constitutional rights of the people and to make it dangerous and painful to defy the laws of the state.

Mobs, night-riders, flogging patrols and lynchers should be warned that there is a governor in Georgia who will spare no power and no pains to prosecute and punish every actor in an outrage upon the humblest citizen and the due process of our laws.

Taking the People's Money.

The governmental costs of the state must come from the people. Taxation of their wealth and earnings is necessary. But it is fundamental that no more money shall be taken from the people than is needful to economically support the government they have self-ordained. Public money is trust money and should be handled with all care and fidelity. No official should have liberty to use the funds entrusted to him with partiality and with prejudice for his own personal policies, however well-intentioned.

What Georgia now needs is a thoroughly scientific scheme of taxation that will bring all proper subjects upon the tax rolls and equalize the levies upon the people in just proportion to their ability and duty to contribute to the expenses of government.

Governor Hardman has the experience in business, finance and in public contacts that should enable him to present such a scheme to the legislature and the people. It is the opportunity of a generation to recommend a realizable system of adequate and equitable taxation in a rich and progressive state.

The people of Georgia need equity, not pity!

They are not groaning under an oppressive public debt. Of the 48 states in the union only eight have a less public debt per capita, and ours is only $1.84.

And the amazing fact stands out upon the record that the people of no state in the union have less governmental costs, per capita, to pay than the people of Georgia. Our cost per person is only $4.75 per year.

We Want Out of the Mud!

A million active adult citizens of Georgia are anxious to know what will be Governor Hardman's policy in the matter of good roads.

Will he advocate the state unit system and the building of essential main lines through the state to connect our people and their transport with the outside world?

Or will he favor the continuance of the costly and inconsistent county cooperative plan that is now splotching the road map of Georgia with patches of good road sandwiched between long stretches of so-called highways that resolve into impassable mudways whenever there is an ordinary rain?

The really active people of the state want to get out of the mud that is degrading the fame of the state and retarding its population and prosperities. Governor Hardman can do the people no greater service than to secure the thorough reformation of their highway system.

After that he can easily rally popular support for the better equipment and conduct of our public school system; for the unification and prideful sustenance of our State university scheme; for banking laws that will protect the deposits of the people; and for such reforms in the administration of justice as will give speedy results to those who are forced to rely upon courts for their rights.

And for all those things the people generally, as they look upon Governor Hardman, have hope. They believe that in him they have chosen a man wise and able enough to restore to Georgia her crown as the Empire state of the South!

Palm Sunday vs. Good Friday.

Palm Sunday and Good Friday have stood out in history, in sensational contrast, as the expression of the fickleness of human nature. We wonder how men who cried, "Hosanna" on Sunday, could shout, "crucify Him" on Friday; that the same man should seem to them on one day worthy to be their king and a few days afterward, a guilty criminal to be put to death. Students of the crowd, in the presence of the Jerusalem mob, have despaired of democracy. But crowds, like individuals, have a right to be heard, and each crowd should be studied in the light of circumstances and the significance of special occasions.

The Mob's Defense.

Of course the charge is, that this crowd was ready to crown Jesus one day, and five days afterwards, they had so changed that they crucified Him. Their defense would be that it was not they who had changed, but Jesus. Certainly from their standpoint this was true. Jesus entered Jerusalem on Sunday as the fulfillment of their highest national and religious hope. He was the realization of a racial dream. They welcomed Him as "the Son of David." He was the king who was to deliver them from the yoke of a tyrant and restore the golden days of Israel. In order to judge fairly, we need to recall how long they had been under the oppression of aliens, and the humiliation to which they had been subjected through all of these years. We must remember the burden of taxation, with its wretched injustices, which had crushed out all economic hope.

Then came the stories from the surrounding towns and villages of the words and works of this wonder-person, Jesus of Nazareth. Eagerly men told each other that at last the Messianic hope of Israel had found its fulfillment. When the news came that He was approaching Jerusalem there is little wonder that the city was swept with a wave of ecstatic emotionalism, and that they went forth to meet Him with palm branches in their hands and hosannas upon their lips.

Now, if we would understand, we must try to see the striking contrast and the shocking difference between the Jesus whom they thought they were welcoming, and the Jesus whom they came to know during the days of the week that followed. Instead of picturing a victorious Israel, conquering the enemies and restoring the throne of David, he is reiterating with increasing emphasis the truth that His kingdom was not to be of this world. He astounds and disgusts them by insisting that they should pay taxes to Rome. He openly opposes armed resistance to their oppressors, and advocates submission to foreign rule. Jesus, from their viewpoint, not only failed to be what they believed Him to be, but is revealed as a traitor to their patriotic ideals.

We must understand, too, how horribly they were disappointed in Him as a religious leader. He was far from being the fulfillment of their prophets. Instead of proclaiming a national god who claimed Israel as his peculiar people, He preached a universal God, who was Father of Gentile as well as Israelite. He profaned their religious customs and set at naught the teachings of Moses. In a word, the Jesus whom they hailed with their hosannas on Sunday was a very different Jesus from the one they crucified on Friday.

The Hope of Democracy.

We have here a study in human nature, rather than an expression of that which is peculiar to any one race or nationality. Men are so prone to fashion their heroes in their own image. They choose for their leaders those who will shout their shibboleths, profess their creeds, and who respond sensitively to their emotions. For this reason there is a tremendous temptation to those who would lead the crowd to become demagogues. It is so easy to proclaim the creed of popular faith, and to become the mere echo of the voice of the mob. It requires the highest order of courage to stand out against a popular belief or sentiment, and the highest order of love is that which loves men too well to feed their passions, pander to their prejudices, and to nourish their misled emotions. This is the highest order of courage and the greatest love because nothing is so cruel and so unreasoning as the emotional enmity of men, aroused and united by class or religious consciousness.

When men's prejudices and hatreds gather about a religious conviction there comes the belief that they have a divine approval, and are backed by divine power. Bigotry and hatred, thus armed, is truly terrible. Here is the significance of the stories of the world's martyrs. The crowd makes its definition, in terms of patriotism or religion, of what the man ought to be and then when he dares to refuse to conform to this definition, they crucify him.

Fronting such a picture as this, and of other mobs of history, one is tempted to despair of democracy. That means to lose faith in human nature. But we must turn from that mob and look into the face of the man pinioned by their ignorance and hatred to the cross. Love and faith still shine from His eyes. He knew, as no other man has ever known, the weaknesses and limitations of human nature, yet he believed that beneath all of this there is a capacity in human life to respond to the highest and the holiest. In this faith he dared die with the prayer upon his lips, "Father, forgive them," and to risk the whole enterprise of the redemption of the race upon his belief that, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." Here is to be found the true hope of democracy and the coming of the Kingdom of God on earth.

Interrogatories Addressed To Smith Of Wide Political Importance

BY MARK SULLIVAN.

Washington, April 9.—(Special Correspondence.)—The interogatories directed to Governor Smith, of New York, calling on him to state his personal position about certain dogmas of his church, constituted a political event of the most elevated importance. In addition to the reply asked by Governor Smith, much other discussion by various authorities on both sides is in course of preparation.

The original interrogatories were contained in two publications: The first was a carefully written, unsigned editorial in "The New Republic" for March 23; the second was a signed article in "The Atlantic Monthly" for April.

Of the background and spirit of these interrogatories it can be said that they are friendly to Governor Smith. The purpose, on the whole, was decidedly not to put Governor Smith "in a hole;" it was rather to provided him with an opportunity to get rid of a handicap. This spirit of friendliness to Governor Smith is particularly strong in "The New Republic" editorial. "The Atlantic Monthly" article has the slightly argumentative combativeness unescapable in an article that takes the form of an open letter. The whole episode of raising the question of Governor Smith's religion in this form came from the highbrow section of American thought. And it is a fact that the highbrows, in increasing numbers and with increasing energy, are supporting Governor Smith's aspirations for the presidency.

It is a virtue of the discussion of Governor Smith's religion in "The New Republic" and "The Atlantic Monthly" that the subject is raised to an intellectual basis and is removed as far as possible from the innuendo and mystery which characterize the treatment of the question in Ku-Klux Klan circles, for example.

"The New Republic" editorial amounts practically to a declaration in favor of Smith for the presidency. The portions of the editorial prefatory to the questions it raises are in effect an encomium of Governor Smith, a declaration that "The New Republic" prefers him above all other aspirants for the presidency. It says:

"Among all the prominent candidates for president in both parties there is only one thoroughgoing progressive—Governor Alfred Smith, of New York. He alone is capable of popularizing through the vehicle of party politics a progressive outlook on government and social organization as opposed to the Coolidge-Mellon rationalization of plutocracy. His personality . . . fits him for the task of exposing the shams of Coolidgism and of reintroducing the contagion of progressivism into inert American opinion of today . . . Governor Smith is the only candidate whose campaign and whose victory would restore a progressive outlook to some chance of popularity and power."

"The New Republic," having thus expressed its preference for Governor Smith over all other candidates, says:

"Yet his Catholicism continues to look like an insurmountable obstacle."

"The New Republic" explains the nature of this obstacle by saying that "the average Protestant middle-class burgher" suspects that Catholics have a divided loyalty. "He fears that a Catholic president, no matter how loyal in ordinary conditions to the secular state, may in the case of a conflict of obligations involuntarily prefer the interests of the church to those of the American republic."

Such suspicions, "The New Republic" thinks, are "wholly unreasonable. They are the smoldering embers of a (medieval) period of religious war . . . At present . . . the church usually asks nothing of the state except to be let alone. It does not oppose ecclesiastical to political authority."

Nevertheless, "The New Republic" thinks the American voter should be made absolutely certain that these suspicions are unfounded. It asks Governor Smith to give out such an utterance as will make the American voter absolutely confident. Such an assurance from Governor Smith, "The New Republic" regards as desirable and reasonable, because:

"The constitution bestows on the president enormous discretionary powers—far greater than those exercised by any king or prime minister in Europe. He is the conspicuous, the continuous and the actively responsible representative of national sovereignty and cohesion. Public opinion must, above everything else, have confidence in him—confidence not necessarily in his ability as a statesman, but certainly in his good faith as the servant and guardian of organized American society in its secular aspect. His supreme and undivided loyalty to the state should be above suspicion. If any large number of his fellow citizens should, with some show of reason, suspect him in certain respects of a divided loyalty the consequence would be terrible to contemplate. It would endanger the stability of American government and society."

For this reason "The New Republic" regarded it as imperative that Governor Smith should speak out "with his usual honesty about his own Catholicism and discuss frankly those matters of public policy which raise any question of divided loyalty."

One of the specific questions which "The New Republic" thinks Governor Smith should answer is phrased not as a question but in the following form:

"He cannot too repeatedly . . . explain that his political acts are not and will not be subject to undue influence by his church, . . . that for the present he is in favor of a system of public education which is free from ecclesiastical control."

"The Atlantic Monthly" article, more than "The New Republic" editorial, has the manner of opening a debate. The title of it is "An Open Letter to the Hon. Alfred E. Smith; A Question That Needs an Answer." Its author is Charles C. Marshall, described as "an experienced attorney of New York city, who has throughout his active life been closely associated with the Anglican church and has made himself an authority upon canon law." Mr. Marshall is apparently a canon lawyer, which means a person learned in the refinements of the dogmas of churches, especially those of the Catholic and Episcopalian churches.

Mr. Marshall quotes several passages from authoritative utterances by officials of the Catholic church, or from authoritative declarations of Catholic church dogma. All the quotations he picks out are comparatively recent. He avoids seeming to dig up mediaval doctrines and gives his quotations as reflecting the current views held by the present or very recent authorities of the Catholic church. His effort is to show that there is a present-day conflict between some of the dogmas of the Catholic church and some of the principles of the American constitution and system of government. In his introduction Mr. Marshall says to Governor Smith:

"There is a note of doubt . . . as to certain conceptions which your fellow citizens attribute to you as a loyal and conscientious Roman Catholic, which in their minds are irreconcilable with that constitution which as president you must support and defend, and with the principles of civil and religious liberty on which American institutions are based. . . . Is not the time ripe and the occasion opportune for a declaration, if it can be made, that shall clear away all doubt as to the reconcilability of her (the Catholic church's) status and her claims with American constitutional principles? With such a statement the only question as to your proud eligibility to the presidential office would disappear, and the doubts of your fellow citizens not of the Roman Catholic church would be instantly resolved in your favor. . . ."

Mr. Marshall, among other quotations, cited one from a syllabus of Pope Pius IX, 1864:

"To hold that national churches, withdrawn from the authority of the Roman pontiff and altogether separated, can be established, is error."

In the same spirit Mr. Marshall quotes "that great compendium of Roman Catholic teaching, the Catholic Encyclopedia," as declaring that the Roman Catholic church "regards dogmatic intolerance not alone as her incontestable right but as her sacred duty."

Still, in the same spirit, Mr. Marshall quotes Pope Leo XIII:

"The (Roman Catholic) church, indeed, deems it unlawful to place the various forms of divine worship on the same footing as the true religion, but does not on that account condemn those hulers who, for the sake of securing some great good or of hindering some great evil, allow patiently custom or usage to be a kind of sanction for each kind of religion having its place in the state."

Again he quotes Pope Leo as saying that the Roman Catholic church "deems it unlawful to place the various forms of divine worship on the same footing as the true religoin."

From these quotations of Catholic church authorities Mr. Marshall deduces, in his own words, that the Catholic church denies "a lawful equality of other religions with that of the Roman Catholic church." Mr. Marshall says the Catholic church is willing to let other religions exist by tolerance—"by favor, but not by right." Then Mr. Marshall, addressing himself to Governor Smith, says: "We would ask, sir, whether such favors can be accepted in place of rights by those owning the name of freemen?"

In effect Mr. Marshall's question to Governor Smith is: "Do you admit that the Episcopal church, and the Baptist church, and all other non-Catholic churches, have the same right to exist as the Catholic church? If you do admit this, are you not at variance with the authorities of the Catholic church?"

Mr. Marshall then prints some quotations dealing with another field, the area where the authority of the church and the authority of the state meet, overlap, or conflict. He quotes the Catholic Encyclopedia as saying:

"In case of direct contradiction, making it impossible for both jurisdictions to be exercised, the jurisdiction of the church prevails and that of the state is excluded."

As respects this quotation of Catholic dogma Mr. Marshall asks Governor Smith:

"Citizens who waver in your support would ask whether, as a Roman Catholic, you accept as authoritative the teaching of the Roman Catholic church that in case of contradiction, making it impossible for the jurisdiction of that church and the jurisdiction of the state to agree, the jurisdiction of the church shall prevail; whether, as statesman, you accept the teachings of the supreme court of the United States that, in matters of religious practices which in the opinion of the state are inconsistent with its peace and safety, the jurisdiction of the state shall prevail; and, if you accept both teachings how you will reconcile them."

In this careful and exhaustive summing up of the reasons for questioning the expediency of having a Catholic president of the United States there is much clear merit. It exhausts the possible objections that are a reasonable basis for legitimate debate. It ignores the fantastic hodge-podge of preposterous tales that go about by word of mouth, stories about the Pope coming to set up his capital in the white house, stories of gory oaths, stories about stacks of arms concealed in the basements of Catholic churches—all the wild tales that are believed by or passed around by fanatic anti-Catholics. By ignoring these "The New Republic" editorial and "The Atlantic Monthly" article convey a wholesome assurance that they are baseless. Everything that has substance as material for debate on this question is assembled in these two articles in two American magazines of high standing; and there is no more. The whole subject is brought into the open. To quote "The New Republic," all "the alleged objections to electing a Catholic president of the United States"

BOOK REVIEWS IN TBALOID

EVERYBODY'S BISHOP.
The Life and Times of the Right Rev. Samuel Fallows, D. D. By his daughter, Alice Katherine Fallows.

This is a valuable book for two very definite reasons. It makes a permanent record of the life and character of an outstanding and great American. It also incidentally gives quite an interesting view of American life through 75 eventful years. Miss Fallows has succeeded in a difficult task, perhaps the most difficult of all literary work. The biographer must be a portrait painter of the spirit. The mere gathering of facts, dates, names and incidents is comparatively easy, but so to set them forth that a faithful image of the real personality will stand out clearly is the work of an artist. To say that the author has succeeded at such a task is really high praise.

In the story, from the far childhood years in England, when Sammy dares the "Black Ditch," to the day when the aged body of the great bishop was carried to its grave with the blessing of a people, a very vivid and virile personality moves. A certain sort of radiance glows upon the reader. One gets a very definite impression of optomistic and unconquerable benevolence—and beneficence. The episcopacy is an exalted station, and when a personality lifts to that level the world has one of its most beautiful and useful spirits. The evidently adoring daughter has made us believe that such was true of Bishop Fallows.

The the author halts momentarily in her greater task to pass judgment upon issues and contests in which her father was engaged, she does not always show a detached and critical mind. For instance, her statement that the Reformed Episcopal church was the first split from the Episcopal church since the Reformation, as, also, her judgment that it was the most important church secession of the century, will excite at least mild surprise in historians. One wonders on what authority she makes the statement about Phillips Brooks. The author says definitely that Mr. Brooks intimated that he would go with the Reformed church and later changed his mind. This is a rather surprising statement. Allen, Brooks' great biographer, says: "It was evident in these years, the early seventies, that things were rapidly tending toward a separatist movement in the Episcopal church. The schism was finally consummated in 1873 when the Reformed Episcopal church was organized. . . . With this movement Mr. Brooks had no sympathy." But such wanderings from her main purpose are few, and surely can be forgiven a daughter.

The versatility of Samuel Fallows is quite astounding. He was preacher, writer, editor, chaplain, soldier, college president, bishop and a dozen other things. He was a conspicuous figure in many of the greater movements of his time, and his time was almost a century of the nation's life. The men who honored and paid tribute to him and the surprising company who contributed to the preparation of his biography constitute almost the nation's honor roll.

"Everybody's Bishop!" A lovely and a very remarkable title for a biography. But the reader feels that Miss Fallows has made out her case.

LIFE OF EUGENE FIELD.
The Poet of Childhood, as Eugene Field is called, has always appealed to the masses, for every reader loves the writings of this kind and gentle writer.

This volume was written by Slason Thomson, who knew Mr. Field intimately, and in writing this biography he covers his life not only as a man but as a poet, humorist, journalist, columnist,—in fact he presents the many sides of this well known character in a most interesting style.

The world of literature and letters only knew Mr. Field as a writer of simple pathos and delicate humor. But his most intimate friends saw another side of his nature—the genius who was picturesque, full of moods which can be compared to sunshine and shadow, full of humor and originality to which he frequently gave vent in practical jokes, unfamiliar verse, and in making caricatures of his best friends.

The writer of this biography was intimately associated with Eugene Field when, as young men, they worked side by side in a newspaper office, this friendship lasting through his life. He says that while Field was always spoken of as the poet who loved children that once upon a time he heard him say that he loved them in so far as he could make a pet of the child.

The reader will be very much amused at the original reference and sayings in which Mr. Field indulged in as he "showed up" the characteristics of his literary friends.

As a whole the book filled with the sayings, verses and episodes of Eugene Field, much loved writer, is a contribution to literature and should be in every home library. (D. Appleton & Co. New York.)

POETRY AND DRAMA.
Caponsacchi, a play by Arthur Goodrich and Rose A. Palmer, with foreword by William Lyon Phelps—afterword by Clayton Hamilton.

The basis of this old and distinguished play is Robert Browning's famous dramatic poem, "The Ring and the Book." The play is staged in a seventeenth century Italian setting. (D. Appleton & Co. New York.)

Plays of Strolling Mummies, edited by Frank Shay, who has compiled and edited an anthology of eight short plays. Mr. Shay has prefaced each play with short remarks which gives the plays a continuity in reading, and which may be spoken by a harlequin character before the plays are produced. (D. Appleton & Co. New York.)

These Things I Love, by Mary Wentworth King. These little songs—songs of the "sweet gladness and deep pulsings of the earth," are appealing, especially "Day's End."

"Shades drawn low—the world apart,
Silence and sweet content
And nestling 'neath a tired heart
A joy that home has lent."

Poems on Chicago and Illinois, by Horace Spencer Fiske. This artistic illustrated little volume of poems of the City by the Lake is historical, and the book has much to commend its beauty in its portrayal of Chicago. (The Stratford Company.)

Round Home, by Chas. S. Kinnison. He writes of home life—its love, its pathos and its humor. It is a book of poems that tell of life inside the four walls, of the fireside, the children, the friends—in fact it is a complete picture of home, and home life by a man who has the appealing spirit of Eugene Field. (George Sully & Co. New York.)

Festival and Civic Plays from Greek and Roman tales, by Mari Ruef Hofer, author of Recreation Books for Schools and Playgrounds. (Beckley-Cardy Co. Chicago.)

BOOKS ON HEALTH.
Ventilation and Health. The New Hygiene of Fresh Air, by Dr. Thomas Wood, author of Health and Education, and Ethel M. Hendriksen. This book tells the latest scientific facts on how all buildings may easily be supplied with fresh air. (Appleton's Book.)

Varieties of Adolescent Experience, by E. Leigh Mudge. The book is based on several sketches written by college students. (Century.)

RELIGIOUS BOOKS RECEIVED.
Under the Ban, by Rev. Alonzo Love, a greatly beloved minister in Virginia where he spent nearly 30 years in living and loving his brother-mankind.

This book by Dr. Love is a strong treatise of 20 subjects—beginning with the creation and closing with Heaven.

The chapters deal with Evolution, Immortality, the Millenium, and other religious subjects. (The Stratford Co. Boston.)

Roses from Eden, by Lew Liu Luh, of which is said: "It is a creative distillation or rather a mosaic of the great, but quite unevenly great, Hebrew literature. Wonderfully blended into this mosaic is all the most beautiful or most noble or most majestic in the unparalleled literature of Israel."

The critic goes further than this, for he says, "If I were compelled to choose between 'Roads from Eden' and an equal number of consecutive pages of any other book that has ever been printed, our choice would go without hesitation to 'Roads from Eden.'" (A. G. Seiler, Publisher. New York. Price $3.00.)

POLITICAL AND INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY.
Political and Industrial Democracy, 1776-1926, by W. Jett Lauck, former professor of economics and politics, Washington and Lee university. His book is partly based on the following questions: "What would Thomas Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence, its signers, and the members of the constitutional convention, if they were living today, do to supplement their immortal work?

"How can we make our democratic principles and institutions secure against radical and revolutionary tendencies?

"What is the significance of the post-war movement for employee representation, or socalled company unions, and democracy in industry?

"What has been done by outstanding and far-seeing industrial leaders to democratize industry?

"What is the relation of the organized labor movement to industrial democracy?"

The above questions are discussed very freely, frankly and earnestly by the author in nearly four hundred pages.

It is a book that should be read by men and women citizens of every business and profession, in fact, by all those who love humanity and democracy, and who would "perpetuate American institutions and ideals." (Funk & Wagnalls Company. New York.)

JOHN THOMAS,
Author of "Dry Martini."

Dry Martini, by John Thomas. This book of fiction was published in the fall of 1926. It attracted a good deal of attention at that time and it is still attracting attenion. The question is frequently asked who is John Thomas? The literary editors all over the country have been somewhat puzzled by this name and they have expressed some doubts about there really being an author by the name of John Thomas in existence.

And now for the sake of the readers and the critics, and to settle a question that has been under discussion for some time, we present the picture of John Thomas, author of "Dry Martini," and a son of a well known physician of New York city.

The story proved a success from the first, not only among its readers, but it has been dramatized for the movies and New York is enjoying its success. The work was published by George H. Doran company.

The New Poor, by Clarissa Fairchild Cushman. The story is woven around Margaret and Sue Winthrop, who have joined the new business ranks for women and who find it rather hard to make both ends meet as they work daily in the office of a great magazine, but even here Cupid found them and the result is that later we find Margaret the wife of an instructor of a college in a small town and in the next few years she experiences all the ups and downs that usually follows the footsteps of a poorly paid professor.

Sue Winthrop, the sister, decides that she does not want love and debts so she selects money without love.

The two cases portray two modern marriages, the story of which will be read with much interest. (Harper and Brothers, New York.)

Dr. Morel, by Karen Bramson. The story is written in exciting style and carries with it plenty of action from the first chapter to the last. (Greenberg, publisher, New York.)

The Ex-Nun, by Will W. Whalen.
The Girl From Mine-Run, by Whalen.
The Vision Beyond, by Maurice V. Reidy, are published by the B. Herder Book company, of St. Louis, Mo.

White Wind, by Jacob Wendell Clark. This story is very much out of the ordinary. It is laid among the mines and the woods of the northwest country, a region in which Dr. Clark spent a number of years as resident physician. (J. H. Sears & Co., New York.)

NEW FICTION RECEIVED.
Rivers to Cross," by Roland Pertwee. The hero of this story is a young Englishman who was a secret service agent in Germany during the war. There is plenty of action and plenty of romance. (Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston.)

Horizon, by Robert Carse. He tells the story of a man who is a wanderer—born a wanderer—and of the call that is always coming, calling him. The story tells of the man's search for the thing he never finds, although he is always wishing and watching for it. Finally there comes into his life the love of two women and the loyalty of one. The story tells of his life while sailing the western seas and until he comes back to New York, where he stages his last great fight and comes out a winner. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

The Family Flivvers to Frisco, by Frederic F. Van de Water, who is known as a popular novelist and columnist, but he has never written any fiction story or sea that can equal his amusing account of how he and his wife and young son flivvered from New York to San Francisco. When they decided to make this motor tour of 4,000 miles or more he knew they were going to have a good time regardless of the ups and downs that come to every motorist.

The author tells the story of the 37-day trip in his characteristic style, and with all the gloomy predictions from friends as a send-off, but they reached their destination with perhaps as few tire and other troubles as the usual traveler has, and believing the old adage that variety is the spice of life, for, if nothing else, it relieved the sameness of eachday.

Mr. Van de Water has written the story of his trip in a clever, bright, breezy style that will entertain as well as prove to be a good highway guide, and more than that, the front of the book has a map giving the direct route the author and his family followed in their holiday trip to the west. (D. Appleton & Co., New York.)

LITERARY DRIFTWOOD.
Anne Douglas Sedgwick, whose new novel, The Old Countess, published by Houghton Mifflin company, is an American by birth, although she has lived in England since the age of nine. "My memories of New York," she writes, "and of Irvington-on-the-Hudson, where I lived until I was taken to England, are dim. Much clearer are the pictures of southern Ohio and very different from the pictures of the middle west that I find in modern American novels. Sobriety, sweetness, tradition are the things that best fit my memories of my grandfather's and grandmother's home; an Emersonian flavor, a love of books and of nature."

Sunday Health Talks

BY DR. WILLIAM BRADY

FALLACIES WE RELUCT TO RELINQUISH.
(1—Albuminuria.)

We doctors are surely entitled to our doctrines. It is only when a doctrine has proved false that we become censurable for persisting in it. Twenty-five years ago Old Bernard Shaw, addressing a medical convention in London, said the family doctor dare not tell patients the truth lest patients change doctors. At the time this made a deep impression on me. I was just then getting some experience in telling patients the truth, and I felt that Shaw was pretty nearly right about it. But here the other day Old Bernard Shaw, this time addressing a convention of paths of some kind, sprang another of his carefully turned epigrams. He said he himself knew as much medicine or could learn as much in an hour or two as the medical gentlemen he has met. Which is a great relief to my mind, for now I know that old lady Shaw is just like plain people, he likes to think he knows about as much as the doctor knows. Talk, talk, talk—that's George Bernard's middle name. Lots of famous doctors, not to mention presidents, financiers and automobile builders, have won fame mainly by sawing wood. I reckon Shaw and I have an idiosyncrasy for flying sawdust.

A fallacy which crops up every little while in letters from readers, though I am not aware that it has ever been a medical doctrine, is that albuminuria (the excretion of albumen by the kidneys) bears some relation with the eating of foods which contain albumen or albumious material and that such foods should be omitted from the diet for the purpose of preventing the elimination of albumen through the kidneys. This is an error.

There is a minute quantity of albumen normally present in the urine, though not enough to show in ordinary clinical tests. This trace becomes detectable by the ordinary tests (1) immediately after vigorous exercise, (2) immediately after a cold bath, (3) when the individual is under great anxiety. There are common instances of albuminuria in health. The finding of albumen is therefore not in itself a very significant criterion unless this finding is corroborated by other signs or circumstances.

It is true that after a very hearty meal or overindulgence in food a transitory albuminuria may occur, irrespective of the composition of the food consumed, the albumen in these cases being derived from the blood, not directly from the food.

Still another source of error is postural or orthostatic albumiauria, detected in certain individuals who have lordosis—hollow back, sway back. Such individuals are usually weak, anemic, subject to fainting spells, and often have movable kidney. Nuff sed to indicate the type. The albumen has no serious significance.

There are several other conditions which may produce albuminuria in the absence of any disease of the kidneys. Albumen in the urine is of no more definite significance than high blood pressure and the patient who seeks a remedy for or treatment of either of these features or signs without concern as to the cause for it is trifling with his death.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.
A Mystery Solved.

I am troubled with rheumatism in my limbs, arms and back. You claim there is no such thing as rheumatism. Please tell me what I have got, then, and what medicine to take for it. (M. S.)

Answer.—That is easy enough, now. You've got legs, ma'am. I am unable to surmise what the painful condition may be which you call rheumatism. You should consult a physician about that.

Mother Always Does.

Being kept out of athletics by an injury (yes, football) I go in for music, in high school. My mother insists that playing a wind or reed instrument will result in cancer of the mouth. We have agreed to abide by your opinion. (B. C. N.)

Answer.)—There is no such effect to be feared. Mothers will think up something to worry about, sh?

Hark, Here That Flop?

How can one tell if the stomach has dropped? (S. H. E.)

Answer.—One can't. The doctor may discover if such a thing has happened. But anyway, what of it? Lots of us have fallen stomachs but we never learn about it and no harm is done.

Smoking.

My husband has been ill for six years. Doctors cannot see what is wrong with him. He complains of not feeling well and wants to be sleeping and lying about. He will not let me have a window open day or night. He smokes 200 or 300 cigarettes every day, one right after the other. I bought him a $5 pipe but he threw it away. He says he will see me in hell before he will give up smoking . . . (I.)

I am not sure my girl friends and I will take your advice, but I really think you should answer this question in your column, Mr. Brady. Is smoking injurious to girls? More so than men? Is inhaling more injurious than plain smoking? Some one told me tha inhaling ruined a girl's constitution, but being as this was a Sunday schol teacher I did not pay much attention . . . (M. E.)

Answer.—How could anyone do anything else if he must consume 200 or 300 simpsticks daily? This fellow needs six months in a good jail, or some such institution where under strict surveillance he may be weaned from his habit. Smoking is not more injurious to girls than it is to boys. Inhaling is not more injurious than plain smoking. I agree with the Sunday school teacher about the effect of smoking on a girl's constitution, and the effect is the same on a boy's constitution.

EVERYDAY QUESTIONS

ANSWERED BY
Dr. S. Parkes Cadman.

Fort Wayne, Ind.

Why is it that men follow their bad practices to the end? We have just buried a relative who gambled to the last and lost not only his own money but that which belonged to his family.

The development of human nature is toward fixity of character. It has its seasons during which youth is susceptible, maturity is settled and age is hardened. The wisdom of the wise gets liberal returns, but the Bible assures us that though a fool should be brayed in a mortar pot his folly will not depart from him.

When Old Joe Raynor, a celebrity of the British race track, lay dying in a garret he was propped up in bed to write a fond farewell to the sport which had brought him to poverty. His case is typical and could be multiplied indefinitely.

Human experience confirms the statement that each sunset marks the departure of openings for betterment irretrievably lost. Reform is a strictly conditioned process. Its overtures are specific, not promiscuous; terminable, not eternal. They are defined by rigid lines and fixed periods. Every man has his average of opportunity measured out and his moral freedom must act within these limitations. Your relative's ruinous habit was the logical result of his earlier practices. His end was determined by his wrong beginnings.

New York City.

A wife whose husband has an adoring but utterly selfish mother felt obliged at a serious domestic crisis to open his eyes to the mother's antagonism to his wife and little children and to expose her devotion to him as self-centeredness. He was fair enough to admit it, but it made a dreadful dent in his trust in humanity.

A second wife, under similar circumstances, made every effort to maintain her husband's belief in his mother, even though it often jeopardized the wife's love for him and warped the development of their young children.

Which wife did the right thing?

Both these mothers demonstrate the incalculable mischief of perverted affection. The maternal tie is so strong that unless it is governed by sound sense and free from partiality it is incapable of justice and frequently betrays the honor and welfare of the family.

The behavior of the older women in your story reminds one of that of Rebekah in the Book of Genesis. She conspired with her favorite son, Jacob, to deceive her aged husband, Isaac, and rob the elder son, Esau, of his birthright. Her treachery generated a quarrel which ultimately became national in its scope.

Any parental action which endangers the peace and unity of the home is condemned by its outcome. No plea of mother love justifies it for a moment. Indeed, this love is frequently a source of domestic discord and a menace to the happiness of courtship and of wedlock.

It is exceedingly hard for some mothers-in-law to accept the situation which their married children impose. They refuse to make that trying surrender of their sons or daughters to another's care and keeping which unselfish love alone dictates.

This difficulty is exemplified in the cases you describe and which are by no means abnormal. The first son succumbs to a general distrust of his fellow creatures because of his discovery that his idolized mother has played fast and loose with the highest good for all concerned. The second son continues in his delusions about his mother at the expense of his wife and children. Under all the circumstances, the wife who decided to protect her little ones at all hazards made the wisest preference.

Washington, D. C.

Is there any historical record that the first Christians ever worshiped Christ as the Jehovah of the Jews incarnated; or to put the question in other words, was Christ known among the first Christians as their God?

The belief of Christ's earliest disciples in His Godhead is a development recorded in the New Testament. Its documents contain no evidence that they identified Him with Jehovah. But they did regard Him as their Lord because He was their Redeemer. They also spoke of him as the Son of God, a Messianic distinction which belonged with many other honorifics to Him who should fulfill Israel's hopes of a visible Deliverer.

In the course of time this title became more significant. Christ was described as Creator and Judge, the express image of the Divine Being for whom and by whom all things were made. Read the Prologue to St. John's Gospel and the classic passages of St. Paul's Epistles for confirmation of these prevalent views among Christians of the Apostolic and sub-Apostolic eras.

They show that Jesus was worshipped as the Incarnation of Deity. Then came the problem as to how Deity could have been manifested in a human form. The church solved it by her doctrine of the Trinity, in which Jesus was the everlasting Son of the Father. This doctrine was evolved from the Christian Scriptures during the third century, and has since been accepted by orthodox believers.

Anti-Saloon League Head Defends His Organization

Editor Constitution: The Constitution delights to strike at the Anti-Saloon League. Most of its subscribers, advertisers and readers are dry and regret the attacks of The Constitution on the eighteenth amendment and the Anti-Saloon League. The Constitution seems troubled that the Anti-Saloon League raised and spent $13,000,000 in six years for political and educational purposes. This is less than 2 cents per capita each year of the six.

The last senatorial primary campaign in one state—Pennsylvania—cost over $5,000,000, practically all of which was spent by two wet candidates.

The present state and national prohibition laws were enacted not so much by the growing moral sense of the people as by the lawlessness of the brewers, distillers and whisky politicians.

The political policy of the Anti-Saloon League is: When two or more dry candidates offer for the same office voters make their own choice without any suggestions from the league. When dry and wet candidates run for the same office we do our best to elect the dry, irrespective of political affiliations. Thus last fall the Anti-Saloon League defeated Senator Wadsworth in New York and elected Congressman Yeats in Illinois.

A few newspapers and others declare that the law is not being enforced and that referendary would prove that the people wish modification and repeal. The best referendum is an election. The last election put more drys in office than ever before. The last congress enacted more prohibition legislation, creating the independent prohibition bureau in the treasury, which the Anti-Saloon League worked for four years. This act places under the civil service laws all employees of the new bureau.

As to the overwhelming prohibition sentiment in Georgia, I challenge any wet to run for congressional, legislative or municipal office successfully—the good Georgia people will not stand for such candidacies.

The continued attacks of The Constitution on the Anti-Saloon League are really complementary and encouraging, for The Constitution would not waste its mighty editorial energies in attacking a decadent or dead institution.

QUERIES ADDRESSED TO SMITH OF IMPORTANCE

are here summoned "to the bar of public opinion." The country will have the immense benefit of the disinfecting, aerating virtue of public discussion.

This is the judgement of Governor Smith's own partisans. "The New York World," which is perhaps the outstanding journalistic supporter of Governor Smith, said:

"To us in New York the idea that Governor Smith in the discharge of a public trust, would be swayed by sectarian motives seems a little absurd. . . . We know that not even his enemies have alleged that he has shown the slightest religious bias. But the rest of the country does not know him as well as we know him. And we may as well face this fact realistically: the big obstacle to his nomination and, in event he is nominated, to his election, is that he is a Catholic. That issue will have to be met. . . . The Marshall letter gives the governor his chance. The points it raises may turn out to be of no great importance; they may be legalistic rather than real. But they are the pith and substance of the case that can be made against a Catholic president; and, what is more to the point, they keep the discussion on a high plane. There will be no compromise of dignity on the governor's part in dealing with these points; they are stated temperately and in a courteous manner. He has promised a reply. One hopes that it will be such a reply as will provide his friends with a real weapon; that it will be such a reply that they can use it to meet all opposition; that it will be such a reply as will hearten them to go forth with a clear conscience and do battle for him."

Another source sympathetic to Governor Smith, Frank Kent, in "The Baltimore Sun," regarded the questions asked Governor Smith in much the same spirit:

"The one thing about which there is no mistake is that this religious issue will be infinitely more dangerous if it is ignored, if it is kept in the background, if it is permitted to become the feature of a whisper campaign, if it is not faced, if the Catholic candidate becomes self-conscious on the subject or pussyfoots on it. If it is brought out in the open, thrashed out, talked out, worn out, in all probability its danger to the Smith candidacy can be largely minimized. The marshall letter gives Smith the chance to meet it as he is accustomed to meet issues—head on. . . . No such questions have ever been asked of a presidential aspirant before. There has never been a presidential aspirant whose candidacy made these questions pertinent. . . . Governor Smith has a chance to say some things that may go a long way toward confining religious prejudice in the future to the ignorant and make intelligent men and women thoroughly ashamed of harboring any. . . . It may easily be the most important political utterance he has yet made. Some men might make it a historic one."

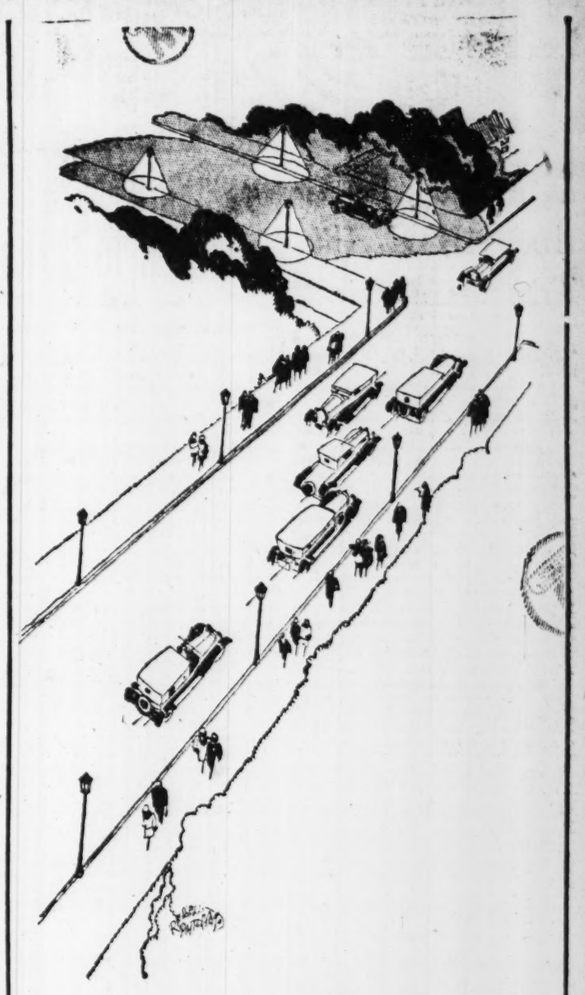

One feels, after laboring to make this issue clear, that a good deal of it is in the world of theological legalisms, the sort of things that "canon lawyers" can jaw about interminably. One cannot be sure that any amount of pains will make it clear to the average layman, or that the average layman will be interested.

Probably it was a feeling of this kind that led to the precise kind of reply made some 30 years ago by a Catholic public man in Boston, famous in that day, Patrick Collins. Collins was a candidate for mayor, he was, I think, the first Catholic mayor of Boston. The same questions now addressed to Governor Smith were addressed to Collins. He put his reply in a single short sentence, saying, in effect: "I am an American first and a Catholic afterward."

There is one other incident, somewhat similar, in recent American history. How many remember the quite considerable furore stirred up as late as 1908, when William H. Taft was a candidate for the presidency? Mr. Taft is a member of the Unitarian church, whose dogma says that God is not three, but one. This failure of Mr. Taft's church to accept the literal divinity of Christ as completely as other denominations caused enough talk by leaders of other Christian churches to give serious concern to the managers of Mr. Taft's campaign.

Tucker Signs.

Richard Tucker has just signed for his third picture for Paramount and will start work directly in "The World at Her Feet," starring Florence Vidor, which Luther Reed will direct. Mr. Tucker is one of four principals, including in addition to Miss. Vidor, Arnold Kent, who plays the lead and Margaret Quimby, who plays Tucker's wife. In this comedy drama, Tucker as the doctor, is the "other man" in a triangle situation which lines him up as a sophisticate. The actor made a record engagement for Paramount in "Wings" as the head of the air forces and followed this with "A Kiss in the Taxi." He recently finished with Warners in "Matinee Ladies."

Do your street lamps make paths or puddles?

MOST streets are lighted in puddles. The pool of light under each lamp-post is surrounded by stretches of shadow.

But light-puddles change to light-paths when Westinghouse plans your street lighting. The whole thoroughfare, from building line to building line, becomes one strip of uniform illumination.

For Westinghouse street lamps, with their exclusive Holophane Westinghouse Bi-lux Refractors, use the light that ordinarily is wasted. Rays which otherwise cluster round the lamp-post or shoot toward the stars are caught by the Refractor and sent where people walk—where traffic moves. There are no shadows — there is no glare. Look at your own street lamps tonight. Do they make puddles — or paths?

Commenting on the Sheridan Road Westinghouse Bi-lux installation, the Chicago Tribune said, editorially, "Coming out of normal street lighting into this section is like stepping from a darkened room into brilliant sunshine."

D. M'Lean, Former Army AWOL Artist Tries the Marines

Douglas MacLean, the young man who went AWOL in "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave," authored in "Seven Keys to Baldpate," fathered in "That's My Baby," and hunted cats in "Hold That Lion," arrives at the Howard theater Monday in a snappy story of the United States marine corps, "Let It Rain."

As "Let-It-Rain" Riley, Doug shows what happens when a young man makes up his mind to accomplish something. A pretty young woman comes aboard ship and the marine recognizes her as the girl of his heart. But when he sees an officer claim her undivided attention he soon resolves to raise himself from the ranks.

Winsome Shirley Mason is the girl. Wade Boteler, who has appeared in MacLean's most recent comedies, enacts Doug's sworn enemy, Kelly, the gob. Frank Campeau, character actor who needs no intriduction, is the marine commander.

John Murray Anderson's "The Book of Dreams" is this week's stage feature. This Publix presentation is a fantasy, staged in three scenes, the first of which presents a setting which consists of a row of books. Among those featured are the Irwin sisters, recently featured in "Bubbling Over;" Mollie Dodd, formerly leading dancer in "Greenwich Village Follies;" Cynthia Farr and Margery Mackay, and the Lenora Jewels.

As an additional stage treat, the Howard will present Frank and Vera Vardon in "Musical Capers," an act consisting of character songs, dialogue and dancing. They will also feature an original song, "The Chicken Chaser's Ball," written by Vardon and Perry, which has made a tremendous hit wherever it has been sung.

Arthur Martel, guest organist, will play Irving Berlin's latest hit, "Blue Skies," on the organ. Joseph Littau and his Howard symphony orchestra will offer "Songs of the British Isles," one of the famous music masters' series, as the overture. Publix News of the World and a cartoon comedy will also be shown.

Suave Mr. Menjou In 'Evening Clothes' ---He Usually Is!

"Evening Clothes," Adolphe Menjou's latest starring vehicle, will provide the patrons of the Rialto theater with excellent entertainment, according to Manager W. T. Murray.

Menjou is at his best in the picture, advance information indicates. In it he undergoes a transformation from a rustic French farmer to the most polished man-about-town in Paris. This, as every woman knows, should serve to bring out the Menjou traits of acting and good looks to the very best advantage.

Accompanying "Evening Clothes" is an educational comedy entitled "Solid Gold." Pathe News is shown and Frank Turner leads the Rialto orchestra in a musical program.

The story of "Evening Clothes" is taken from the French story, "The Man in Evening Clothes."

The story goes something like this: Lucien d'Artois, a wealthy gentleman French farmer lives a bachelor existence on his huge estate where he devotes all his time to raising blooded stock and racing horses. In accordance with the French custom a marriage contract is drawn up with the parents of Germaine (Virginia Valli). The ceremony is performed at his estate. The bride does not love him. She is disgusted with his rustic activities. She cannot understand a man whose interests lie in the breeding of horses and cattle. But she has married him to please her parents. She drives him out of her room and heartbroken, he allows her to leave his home, and gives her half his fortune.

Following his determination to become a Parisian, he shaves his beard, and goes to Paris, to make himself the kind of city man his wife would probably admirer. To this end he assiduously studies fencing and dancing. Having gained a city polish, he invites Germaine to his apartment for dinner. But she does not even afford him this opportunity to prove himself, for she does not come. He embarks upon a life of frivolity. Women like him because he spends money so freely. He is led to boast that he can take any woman away from any man. This he demonstrates by stealing Louise Brooks away from Noah Beery.

FRANKLYN D'AMORE RETURNS TO GRAND

Two attractions will head the new bill at Loew's Grand Theater this week where Franklyn D'Amore will bring his vaudeville hit of last year as one of the headline features, with Hughie Clark, comedian and Tommy Monasco's orchestra providing the other topliner.

Franklyn D'Amore has an act which is said to have no duplicate in vaudeville and one full of clever surprises. He is considered an artist of rare versatility, being a capable musician, a dancer and impersonater and an able showman. This act is one which has appeared as the star attraction at the big vaudeville houses of the east and is one of the many features recently booked by the Loew's organization which includes some of the foremost vaudeville artists of the country.

Hughie Clark, all-around comedian, is another one of the feature attractions added to the Loew-lookings and he will bring with him Tommy Monasco's orchestra. Hughie Clark as chief fun maker and with a background of pretty music provided by the orchestra holds out a pleasing promise to the vaudeville lovers. The combined act is entitled "Past and Present," with Hughie Clark and the orchestra vying with each other to provide the best in entertainment.

Comedy features will be found also in the act of Freeman and Seymour, two well-known funmakers, in a sketch entitled "Everything Will Be All Right." Both are dancers and also sing numerous comic ditties and late novelty hits.

Pretty Winnie Baldwin, singer and musician, will appear in a new song full of late musical numbers and song hits. Miss Baldwin also is a comedienne of note and does not let her act lag a minute.

Those who enjoyed the visit of Anita Diaz's monkeys last season will hail with pleasure the appearance of this young woman with an even larger company of "monks" in their skit "Merry Capers." This is said to be one of the funniest acts of any kind and ought to round out a great fun week at Loew's Grand.

DRAMA ON THE HOOF IN KYNE WESTERN ON GEORGIA SCREEN

"Jim, the Conqueror," a film feature of Peter B. Kyne's novel of the same name, will have its first local showing at Keith's Georgia theater this week and is a romantic drama of the west. Said by the advance notices to be a vivid and realistic story of the deadly feuds once existing between the cattle barons of the great western plains and the sheepherders of the same district, it gives ample opportunity for some hair-raising action of the "shoot 'em up" variety.

"Jim, the Conqueror," is melodrama. The principal role is played by William Boyd and the crux of the drama is a battle for land and water-hole rights—a never-ending feud between the sheepmen and the cattlemen of the hills and plains. It moves swiftly and with wild and woolly abandon through a rain of bullets and the flying feet of cattle to a smashing climax. If you like your drama "on the hoof" you should enjoy this latest contribution showing the early days of the west when everybody went well "heeled" with firearms and all were quick on the trigger.

Capitol View.

Richard Dix in "The Lucky Devil" brings back the popular hero of the screen as an auto driver. Here's Richard in a story of speed, thrills and romance, of the dreamer who spent his entire life dreaming of what he would do if he had a car and what he really did when luck came his way. Shown Monday only.

On Tuesday Buster Keaton furnishes the fun at the Capitol View in "Go West." On Wednesday Zane Grey's story of wild horse hunting in Arizona is portrayed in "Wild Horse Mesa," which is crammed full of fist fights, reckless riding and climaxed with a love theme.

It features Jack Holt and Billie Dove.

Lon Chaney, the man of a thousand faces, looms up in "The Blackbird," a story of the underworld, where mystery lurks behind locked doors and in the foggy streets of London's underworld. Bessie Love in "Lovey Mary," billed Friday, is a picture that every one should see. Saturday, Neil Hamilton will be starred in "Desert Gold," which is a Zane Grey western melodrama of thrills, excitement and tender love. Shirley Mason plays opposite Neil Hamilton.

Alamo No. 2.

"Paying the Price," the sensational Columbia social drama coming to the Alamo No. 2 theater on Monday and Tuesday, has one of the best rounded casts ever assembled for a single photoplay. Each of the players chosen is noted for his or her special type of characterization.

Mary Carr, who plays the mother role, is well remembered for her vivid characterization in "Over the Hill."

Priscilla and Marjorie Bonner, sisters in real life, are the two young sisters in this picture, and are well suited to give a realistic portrayal.

To John Milijan, popular screen "heavy," goes the villain's part, while George Hackathorne, a graduate of the D. W. Griffith school, is given an opportunity to excite sympathy as the gambling club patron accused of murder.

William Welsh, the father, has played a similar role in many productions, among them the ever famous "Over the Hill."

Wednesday and Thursday Corinne Griffith with Norman Kerry in "Mlle Modiste."

Friday and Saturday, Clara Bow with Robert Frazer in "The Scarlet West" will be shown in Atlanta for the first time.

Cameo.

Coming back to Atlanta, at the Cameo on Monday and Tuesday, is a picture which brings forth the charm and romance of gay old Vienna before the war, and tells the romance of a young nobleman; the princess to whom he was married, and of the woman who loved him and who was loved by him, but who renounced her claims to her imaginary "waltz dream" that the married couple might be reunited.

The picture, "The Waltz Dream," is a marvel of entertainment, is beautifully simple in its story, powerful in its subtle drama, and has a superb cast of extraordinary talented players.

On Wednesday and Thursday the Cameo offers Corinne Griffith in one of her most refreshing roles, that of a piano pounding girl in the midst of modern day life; of the young man whom she loved, and their romance, which was tuned to jazz time music, the brassy blare of jazz bands, the roar of the elevated. "Syncopating Sue" is the title of this clever bit of entertainment and the beautiful Corinne, cast in the role of a blonde preferred by gentlemen and curb cruisers as well, has never been more enchanting, more demure or more gorgeously beautiful.

To wind up a very diversified program for the week, the Cameo brings back on Friday and Saturday the great epic picture of Custer's last fight, the events leading up to it, and a romance which echoes the spirit of the times, "The Flaming Frontier." Hoot Gibson, for once given a role in which he may amply display his ability, rises to the occasion and gives us a young army lieutenant, dismissed from West Point because he preferred to accept the blame for a misdemeanor he did not commit, to save a friend who betrayed him.

The life of the frontier is displayed in utmost reality, and the battle which was Custer's last is shown as historically correct as possible.

Felix the Cat proves to be a good samaritan in "Felix the Cat in Barn Yarns," his new animated cartoon comedy released by Educational. A duck saves him from a watery grave and Felix, in return, rescues the kindly duck from a worse fate at the hands of a hungry farmer.

"Brute! How dare you?" says the lady (they always do say that) to Conway Tearle, who, from our front row seat, seems perfectly innocent. They appear in "Altars of Desire" this week at Loew's Grand. "Now, over on this side—" Lewis Stone (top, right) is probably showing Anna Nilsson pictures of his former wives or sweethearts. They are co-starred in "Midnight Lovers" at the Metropolitan. The menjourish Mr. Menjou Menjous at the Rialto in "Evening Clothes" all this week. William Boyd is seen in "Jim, the Conqueror," on the Georgia screen. Following in the footsteps of Lon Chaney, Douglas McLean (lower right) has joined the marines and tells you all about it in five or six funny reels in "Let It Rain" at the Howard.

Lewis Stone Seen As Obliging Hubby; Gets Wife Divorce

If a man loves his wife, should he help her get a divorce?

Lewis Stone is cast in this unique predicament in his featured role of "Midnight Lovers," which will be shown at the Metropolitan theater beginning Monday.

Deeply in love with his wife of a month, the husband is asked by her lawyer to help her get a divorce so she can marry another whom she loves.

The process for securing the divorce is very interesting, as demonstrated on the screen. By forging past letters to each other, in which the wife asks the husband to return and the husband refuses, the proper grounds for divorce are established.

The husband does all this for his wife, but gets drunk, and returns to his house before the proper time limit for desertion is past. The rest of the story is hilarious in the denouement by which the husband wins back his wife and ejects the other suitor.

Anna Q. Nilson plays the role of the sentimentally comic wife, and John Roche asts as the other lover.

The others in the cast are Chester Conklin, Dale Fuller, Purnell Pratt and Harvey Clarke.

Carey Wilson, who wrote the adaptation, also was editorial director of the production, and John Francis Dillon directed it.

Enrico Leide and his Metropolitan orchestra will present for the overture Offenbach's "Orpheus in the Under World." In this musical score for the feature photo play Mr. Leide selected for the central theme "Moonbeams and You," by K. R. Barnum. A return engagement by popular request of the "South's Superlative Septette," a group of young college girls, who registered a marked success recently, will be the extra stage attraction. These young ladies will offer an entirely new act with new and attractive stage settings. The extra screen attractions will include Lupino Lane, in his latest educational comedy, "In Movieland," and the latest issue of the Metropolitan News and Views.

Tudor.

As its opening attraction this week The Tudor offers a picture which is rather a departure from its usual run of melodramas and action features in Monty Banks' "Atta Boy," a hilariously funny comedy. "Atta Boy" is the tale of a newspaper reporter, or rather a "copy boy" whose birthday, through no fault of his own, was April 1, and upon whom was played numerous tricks to celebrate his birth anniversary, the funniest of which was the one with which this story deals. Monty is told that he has been elevated to the position of star reporter and is given the assignment of getting an interview with a man whom one of the other reporters had angered.

A series of adventures, both thrilling and funny, are unravelled on the screen, some of which have caused no end of comment and have been the chief cause of someone saying that Monty was the only man who could give Harold Lloyd a run for his money.

Opening on Thursday is the second of the Ken Maynard pictures, "The Unknown Cavalier." In this latest western thriller Maynard, with his exceptionally beautiful and intelligent horse, appears as an itinerant cowman who walks calmly into the web of intrigue woven by a desperado known as "The Gila Monster," and walks with death unknowingly beside the man whom the countryside had learned to fear, and with cause.

Maynard's pictures enjoy an unusually good reputation as high caliber westerns and this second of his series aids in maintaining the high standard set by his first.

Community Theaters.

West End.

In "To Have and to Hold," all the thrills, the beauty and excitement of a lifetime are crowded into one gorgeous screen romance. Betty Compson and Bert Lytell, two favorites, star in the picture which opens the weekly program at West End, on Monday and Tuesday.

"The Cat's Pajamas," in which Betty Bronson takes the leading role, will be shown Wednesday. Ricardo Cortez as a handsome opera star sneik wins a temperamental French beauty on a bet and later falls in love with a little American girl model in a modiste shop. There's a rare surprise in store for the admirers of Milton Sills and Betty Bronson at the West End theater next Thursday and Friday, when they costar in First National's "Paradise." Saturday of this week features Jack Mulhall and Dorothy MacKail in "Subway Sadie" at the West End theater.

Palace.

"It Must Be Love," another of the heart appealing dramas which Colleen Moore is so famous for, will open the week's program at the West End theater Monday and Tuesday. Elinor Glyn's love drama, "Love's Blindness," which is to be shown at the Palace Wednesday of this week, is a throbbing love story told as only Elinor Glyn can tell it. Antonio Moreno and Pauline Starke have the leading roles.

A gripping drama; romance and heroism beneath the northern lights, courage, loyalty and love in the Canadian wilds are found in "A Hero of the Big Snows," with Rin-Tin-Tin billed Thursday and Friday. "You'd be Surprised," Raymond Griffith's funniest picture, winds up the week at the Palace.

Tenth Street.

"Tin Hats," hailed as the greatest war comedy ever made, opens the week at the Tenth Street theater Monday and Tuesday. It's a rib-tickling romance with the flavor of Rhine wine, with Conrad Nagel and Claire Windsor as the chief romancers. "The Gay Deceiver," starring Lew Cody at his delightful best, is the feature attraction for Wednesday of this week. Clara Bow, long hailed as the reigning queen of flappers, will make her appearance at the Tenth Street theater in Elinor Glyn's love story, "It," next Thursday and Friday. In "It" Miss Bow is presented as a little flapper who rises to the heights because of her mysterious magnetism and in spite of poverty and ignorance. On Saturday "The Ancient Highway" will be shown.

"Love-in-A-Mist" Opens Big Season At Erlanger

With the beautiful new Erlanger theater to enhance its attraction, the charming comedy, "Love-in-a-Mist," will be offered Monday night as the first production of a 10-week run of Broadway successes, a theatrical treat that Atlanta is most eagerly looking forward to. Madge Kennedy and Sidney Blackmer, the New York favorites, who captivated audiences when they appeared here last January in the same production, again are with the company and will take the same roles with which they pleased Atlanta on their previous visits. Alice John and Mary Marble, other actresses whose appearances were highly popular, take the same roles as before. "Love-in-a-Mist" is just the first of a series of productions planned by these two, to be presented at a low scale of prices.

To make this series of plays just as attractive as possible, mausual care has been taken by Mr. Wagner in arranging the productions. In addition to bringing Miss Kennedy, Mr. Blackmer and others to Atlanta for the 10-week season, he now is busy combing the country for other stars who will be fitted into parts in other performances to be staged later. He also has procured the services of Priestly Morrison, one of the ablest stage directors in the country, to come here and give his entire time to the direction of the repertoire which is to be presented. Mr. Morrison has just completed the direction of a second company of "The Barker," a recent success staged by Mr. Wagner, and is the director who had charge of some of the first efforts at stardom of Miss Kennedy and Mr. Blackmer.

The "Love-in-a-Mist" company, intact just as it appeared in New York, but with new wardrobe and scenery to enhance its beauty, will open the season and most members of the company will be retained here to take part in the succeeding performances. Following "Love-in-a-Mist" will come "Fair and Warmer," one of the first successes of Miss Kennedy; "The Mountain Man," in which Mr. Blackmer found fame; "The First Year," in which Mary Marble has an outstanding role; "Quarantine," and "Rollo's Wild Oat." These five already have been selected, but the audiences themselves will be asked to assist the management in selecting those to follow. Two or more new plays will be produced by the company at the Erlanger for the first time on any stage. Seats may now be had at the theater box office, and at the store of M. Rich and Brothers company.

George Atterbury, a dwarf who is just out of his 'teens, has been playing supporting comedy roles in Educational comedies. His more recent part was that of assistant to a hungry ham actor in "H t Soup," a Cameo comedy. Atterbury was brought to America from England by Lupino Lane, star comic now playing in his own series of comedities made at Educational studios.

Just married? (top, left). Nope, they look it. The couple are Sidney Blackmer and Madge Kennedy, who star in the company which will play at the Erlanger for ten weeks this summer. They open this week with "Love-in-a-mist." Next—Winnie Baldwin, who is featured on Loew's Grand stage this week. Top, right—no need to introduce this gent—everybody knows Fred Raymond, who is coming back to the Forsyth Players to delight Atlantans. Just below—the seven young ladies are members of the South's Superlative Septette, a group of Atlanta college girls, who have been reengaged to appear all this week at the Metropolitan. Left to right, they are Mabel Dumas, Mabel Daniels, Frances Stukes, Lillian Clement, Martha Johnston, Jenny Lynn Duval and Vivian Bryant. Lower left—the Paul Remos midgets, who are seen at the Georgia this week. Lower right—scene from "The Book of Dreams" at the Howard.

"The Exciters" Is Feature For This Week at Forsyth

begins to wonder if there are any more good shows which Atlantans haven't seen, along comes the announcement at the Forsyth theater that "The Exciters," one of the greatest attractions of the decade, opens Monday night for a solid week's run.

"The Exciters" will use practically every member of the big Forsyth Players, with Dick Stevenson, Miss Ellis Baker, Gus Forbes, Fred Raymond and Rhea Diveley taking outstanding roles.

The play has to do with a very bored young woman of society—a maiden who is well fed up on conventions, the dull routine of society and gaity—and she wants to get a "kick" out of life. She falls into the clutches of a small slique known as "The Exciters," its members being "out for a thrill."

Well, this young woman joins up and goes out for her thrills. She gets them in a form of a burglar lover. Just here the plot thickens, to use the hackneyed expression—but it really does tighten up. Things begin to move fast—love, romance, fascination, excitement, mystery, adventure—it all is blended perfectly into a play that grips one from start to finish.

The young woman's thrill is of the kind she least expected—or sought—but a tremendous thrill nevertheless, and one which she carries along with her in a manner that furnishes abundant laughter, pep, originality and action. Miss Baker will have this exceptionally interesting role.

Dick Stevenson and Fred Raymond, the latter a former popular leading man, who is succeeding Alan Devitt, will have parts in which they will appear to decided advantage, while Gus Forbes will make his role good, and Lawrence Keating, Miss Diveley, Miss Betty Laurence, vivacious new ingenue, and others will lend themselves to gathering in additional admirers in parts that will have fine appeals to audiences.

Few productions in recent years enjoyed greater popularity in New York than "The Exciters," and it is a play that is certain to have tremendous drawing power for local theatergoers. It is just the type of play that will please stock lovers and the coming week is expected to be a banner one for Manager Semon's playhouse.

WELL-BALANCED BILL SLATED FOR GEORGIA

What is said to be an exceptionally well balanced bill of five vaudeville acts will be found at Keith's Georgia theater this week. Each name is that of a well-known artist of big time quality offering a varied program of entertainment which runs largely to comedy bits. On the screen will be shown Peter B. Kyne's latest story, "Jim the Conqueror," featuring William Boyd and Elinor Fair in a story ward Sutherland, leads off this week's attractions and is being shown Monday and Tuesday. On Wednesday and Thursday Gloria Swanson in a marvelous picture, "The Coast of Folly," featuring scenes of society in all its beauty and intrigueness will be shown, and on Friday, "His Secretary," featuring Norma Shearer in one of her best pictures will be shown. The story shows the trials and experiences of a girl who seeks romance in business.

"Dance Madness," featuring Claire Windsor and Conrad Nagel, will be shown Saturday. The picture should be a big hit as it is a comedy filled with rare scenes of a husband who falls out of love with his wife and seeks romance elsewhere only to be disillusioned and then return to his wife to win her affection again.

Margit Hegedus, Hungarian violinist and former pupil of Savoik, famous instructor in her native land, is making her initial American tour in concert work and the larger vaudeville theaters. Miss Hegedus is assisted at the piano by McLean Todd with a program that has been well received by music lovers everywhere.

Fred Fenton and Sammy Field have a surprise act in which they appear billed as "Themselves." Last season they presented a clever bit entitled "In Person." Whatever the billing, these boys seem always to have something new with which to entertain for they are well-known comedians, dancers and singers.

Paul Remos and his wonder midgets is an offering direct from the European variety halls. Paul is of ordinary stature and an athlete of exceptional ability. His three assistants are midgets; tiny mites of humanity who are also renowned athletes. This combination presents a great deal of comedy and some of the most amazing gymnastic feats seen on the stage.

Frank Fisher and Eldrie Gilmore have a comedy conversational duo which is said to be one of the most enjoyable yet shown by these entertainers. It is entitled "Her Bashful Romeo" and gives Fisher an excellent opportunity to present his character of the bashful young man calling upon his sweetheart. It is built for laugh purposes and succeeds admirably.

Clara Bow, acclaimed by all as the screen's greatest flapper, makes her appearance at the Fairfax theater Monday and Tuesday in Elinor Glyn's great love story, "It." Mae Murray Stars "Altars of Desire" On Loew's Screen

Another success to her long list of screen triumphs has been added by Mae Murray in her new picture "Altars of Desire," in which she appears with Conway Tearle and an all-star company and which will be the feature picture offering at Loew's Grand theater this week. Her new picture gives her wonderful opportunities and she has turned out a fine piece of work, according to the verdict of the critics.

Mae Murray, brilliant star of "Altars of Desire," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture, with Conway Tearle in the feature male lead, was born in Portsmouth, Va. She was brought to New York when four years old.

At the age of 15 she made her first appearance on the stage in the chorus of the Ziegfeld Follies. She wasn't very long in the number class—"No 3 from the end," etc.—for soon she was known as the "Nell Brinkley Girl," representing the type of girl made popular by Nell Brinkley in her drawings at that time. She subsequently danced with immense success in several of New York's most brilliant dine-and-dance rooms.

Our Shocking Young People

Where They Are Going

The following is issued by the committee on church cooperation:

Young people shocked their elders frightfully on the Sunday before the first Easter, nineteen centuries ago. On that Sunday, which will be remembered and celebrated tomorrow as "Palm Sunday" by millions of Christians throughout the world, the children thronging Jerusalem's Temple greeted Jesus of Nazareth with the cry:

"Hosanna to the Son of David."

Old people who had just seen that young man overthrow the tables of the money changers and drive out the sellers of beasts, after His triumphal entry through the city's crowded streets ,where multitudes had met Him with the same glad cry, angrily protested:

"Hearest thou what they say?"

He answered:

"Yea; have ye never read, 'Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?'"

Perhaps, with only four days between Him and the agony of Gethsemane and the Cross on Calvary, He was remembering, as He looked into the glad faces of these boys and girls, the hour in His own boyhood, when in this same place, the Temple, He had said to His own anxious mother:

"Wist ye not I must be about my Father's business?"

Our Youth.

Fourteen thousand two hundred and eighty people were in 18 of the 120 white Sunday schools of Fulton county Sunday a week ago. Last Sunday, 12,818 were in 17 of these schools. If the other 102 schools had an average attendance of only 50, where these reporting the largest schools in the city of Atlanta averaged 766, to the figures already given 5,150 must be added, making it apparent that approximately 19,000 people attended our white Sunday schools on each of the last two Sundays, which were not special, but only the normal days in those schools.

And to these thousands must be added the thousands attending the negro Sunday schools, which are almost as numerous as those just mentioned.

And tomorrow, with many churches holding special services and others celebrating the day as "Palm Sunday," the crowds of young people thronging our churches will be even greater.

Even more significant is this.

Our young people will be in charge of the services, which, beginning Monday and continuing throughout the week, will be held every day, from 12:30 to 1 o'clock, in the Peachtree Arcade.

For You.

Monday the Baptist Young People's Union will have Dr. Weston Bruner as their speaker. Tuesday the Epworth League Union, the young people's organization of the Methodist church, will be in charge with Dr. Wallace Rogers speaking for them.

Bishop H. J. Mikell will speak at the service Wednesday, the Young People's Service League of the Episcopal church conducting the meeting on this day.

Thursday the Christian Endeavor Union, organizations of young people in the Presbyterian, Christian and Congregational churches will be in charge, Dr. J. Sprole Lyons speaking for them; while on Friday, the Peachtree Christian Bible school, with Rev. Gerald Culberson speaking for them, will be responsible for the service.

Saturday the Lutheran young people, the Luther League, will hold the service, Dr. Charles P. McLaughlin being their leader.

Sunday afternoon the meeting will come to an end with a service from 3:30 to 4:30 o'clock in the Peachtree Arcade, with all of the young people's unions in charge, Dr. R. G. Hershey being the speaker for this occasion.

Those Shocked.

Verily, our young people are shocking! Do we forget so quickly!

Was there ever a war in which our youth have not furnished the "shock troops" to be hurled against the enemy or to be thrown into the place of desperate danger to hold the line unbroken against overwhelming attack?

God help us if our young people ever cease to be shocking to the powers of evil, as were those boys and girls crying out in Jerusalem's temple, and as they are today serving in our churches—and elsewhere.

Those pessimists and prophets of doom who have filled our magazines and papers, not to mention some pulpits, with lurid descriptions, which would indicate that all of our young people are drinking, petting and blackbottoming their way into hell, real or figurative, would do well to study and learn the facts and figures which we have given.

Easter's Promise.

As Easter approaches, our greening fields and trees, the dogwood beautifying our woods and the glory and perfume of our budding and blossoming orchards are not more reassuring and potent in their promise and pledge of the return of spring, summer and the coming harvest than are these thousands upon thousands of young people, boys and girls of every age and description, thronging our Sunday schools and churches, in their promise and pledge of the return of spring, summer and the coming harvest, the revival, which will continue without ceasing, ever renewing, extending and spreading the life of our risen Lord, through our churches, until that glad day when there will be no need for a temple or church, because our God, who is Truth, Love and Light, will be enthroned in the hearts of all.

COMMITTEE ON CHURCH COOPERATION—Dr. Charles W. Daniel, Dr. Richard Orme Flinn, Dr. W. W. Memminger, Dr. S. R. Relk, Professor Floyd Field, C. A. Titus, C. H. Steiglitz, E. R. CAMPAIGN PUSHED FOR MOTHERS BUILDING

Leaders of the campaign to erect on the campus of the Martha Berry schools near Rome a mothers' building as the first recorded formal tribute to motherhood, assembling in Atlanta Saturday, announced that plans have been developed to push the movement vigorously during the week of April 18 to 25.

The campaign, which has for its goal $200,000 for the mothers' building, is being sponsored by the Kiwanis clubs of Georgia and other organizations, who will seek also the cooperation of every civic and woman's organization in Georgia.

Among associated organizations active in the campaign from its start are the Martha Berry circles of Rome and Atlanta, groups of women who have been working for years in interest of the institution for education and practical training of boys and girls of limited means and opportunities in the mountain and rural regions of the south.

Activities of these groups have been inspired by the work of Miss Martha Berry, the daughter of a wealthy family who gave her patrimony and all her efforts to building a school which she began in a small cabin on the edge of her home place and which grew to its present position.

"One of the greatest practical works for American citizenship that has been done within this decade," was the description of the school by Theodore Roosevelt after a visit there following his term as president. And in recognition of her work Miss Berry was awarded in 1925 the Roosevelt memorial medal for the woman judged to have accomplished the most distinguished service in behalf of American women and children.

In the plan underlying the mothers' building campaign, the structure is to become the nucleus of a school for collegiate training, to equip boys and girls of the mountains as leaders among their own people and particularly as teachers.

The mothers' building, to be built of the native stone, has been designed as quarters for 200 girls and for teachers of the proposed junior college branch of the Berry schools, with arrangement for addition of wings for larger occupancy if necessary.

According to plans of the campaign committee, effort will be made to break ground for the construction April 30, when the 25th anniversary of the Berry schools' founding will be celebrated.

The campaign is directed for Georgia by W. W. Mundy, of Cedartown, former president of the Georgia district of Kiwanis clubs, as state chairman, and Mrs. Frank M. Inman, of Atlanta, as treasurer. Headquarters are maintained in room 618 of the 101 building, Atlanta.

HARTSOCK GIVES LIST OF SERIES OF STUDY GROUPS

The fifth of the series of lectures on "Modern Poetry" was delivered Friday afternoon by Ernest Hartsock, of the English department of Georgia Tech to the study group of the American Association of University Women.

Mr. Hartsock discussed "Imagestes and Innovators," including Richard Aldington, John Gould Fletcher, Ezra Pound, T. S. Eliott, Carl Sandburg and Amy Lowell.

COLLEGE REGISTRARS MEET HERE TUESDAY

Atlanta will be host to the American Association of Collegiate Registrars April 12, 13 and 14, it was announced by F. J. Paxon, president of the convention and tourist bureau. Atlanta secured the convention largely through the efforts of Hugh H. Caldwell, registrar of Georgia Tech, who attended the convention at Minneapolis and "sold" the educators on Atlanta and the interesting things to be seen in Georgia and the south.

The association has about 400 members and is composed of registrars and other officials of the leading universities in the United States. Registrars at Agnes Scott college, Emory university, University of Georgia, Mercer university, Wesleyan college are members of the association.

R. M. West of the University of Minnesota is president of the organization; Jr. R. Ellis of Yale university, vice president, and J. T. Quick, Pittsburgh university, is secretary of the association.

Another convention will be the Harvard alumni of Georgia on April 14. At this time plans will be mapped for the annual meeting of associated Harvard clubs at Memphis, Tenn., April 21 and 23, it was announced.

Alumni of the oldest college in America, Associated Harvard clubs, are to hold the first convention in the south when the Memphis meeting convenes. It is expected a member of the Memphis club will be present at the Atlanta meeting, at which it also is planned to formulate a more progressive policy for the Georgia club.

RAPID STRIDES MADE ON BETTER HOMES

The Atlanta committee of the Better Homes of America, through its chairman, reports rapid progress in the preparation for better homes week, May 1 to 8. Within the next week nearly all committees working for the demonstration will have been appointed and letters sent to all club and organization presidents asking for the appointment of better homes representatives.

The two homes, built by the Atlanta committee this year, to serve as models of better building and furnishing, have already attracted wide attention, although they will not be ready for general inspection until better homes week, May 1. Home No. 1, at 891 Vedado way, corner of Eighth street, adjacent to the Henry Grady High school for boys, is completed, but not yet furnished.

Home economics classes of the four junior and the two seniors high schools for girls, under the general direction of Miss Clara Lee Cone, have charge of budgeting and selecting the furnishings of the rooms. Better Homes No. 1 represents a selling price of $10,000 for house and grounds, which is the top price allowed for better homes demonstrations, officials said.

Better Home No. 2, built by Hood Realty company, at 57 Howard street, Kirkwood, near Boulevard, DeKalb and the South Decatur car line, represents an outlay of $7,500. It is now being built. It will also be furnished on a budget of 25 per cent of its total value by a furnishings committee headed by Mrs. R. H. Bell, of the Kirkwood Civic league.

Plans Are on Foot To Pave Route 42, Atlanta to Macon

Jackson, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—Work on the Jackson and Indian Springs highway, a link of state-aid route No. 42 from Atlanta to Macon, will begin about April 20, according to the board of county commissioners. All deeds to right-of-way property have been secured and the formal contract signed.

This project is about five miles long and will cost, it is estimated, $150,000. The grading will be done during the spring and summer and the paving laid in the early fall, according to the present plans.

This is one of the most widely traveled highways in the state, passing the Indian Springs, Holiness camp ground and Indian Springs, noted as a health resort. Plans are now being worked out, it is declared, to pave the entire distance of route 42 from Atlanta to Macon. Clayton, Henry, Butts and Monroe counties are all cooperating for a paved highway on this wing of the Dixie highway.

MACON MAN TO JUDGE THOMASVILLE ROSES

Thomasville, Ga., April 9.—(Special.)—J. D. Crump, of Macon, vice president for Georgia of the American Rose society, has accepted the invitation to be a judge of roses at the coming Rose show here on Aril 22. Mr Crump will be one of the judges of the Flower show at Jacksonville, on April 21, and will come from there to Thomasville in time for the Rose show here.

Both the Atlantic Coast Line and the A., B. C. railroads are planning to put on special rates for the occasion and will also run special trains.

It has been suggested that the show be open two days, but owing to the delicate character of the roses they would hardly be as fresh looking the second day, so it will be held one day, as usual.

DRY WEATHER HURTS GEORGIA ASPARAGUS

Montezuma, Ga., April 9—(Special.) The asparagus season is nearing its close in this section and large growers here stated today that the total outpput would be from 40 to 60 percent less than they expected. This was due, it was said ,to the the continued dry weather during recent weeks and also to the fact that asparagus from Illinois and other northern states is on the market and, with the appearance of the home grown asparagus on the market, the price drops so that it cannot be shipped profitably from the south.

The quality shipped this year has been fine and until the last week the returns have been entirely satisfactory. Interest in asparagus is on the increase and a large additional acreage was planted to it this spring by farmers throughout the county.

City-Wide Poll Is Opened

:: WINNERS GET CHANCE AT EUROPEAN TOUR ::

To Pick Foremost Women

BY HERB M'CUSKER.

Who is the preeminent business woman and the preeminent professional woman in Atlanta?

The city shall have the opportunity to decide these two questions with the introduction today of a city-wide poll, sponsored by the Business and Professional Woman's club of Atlanta, the purpose of which is to name two candidates for nomination in a nation-wide poll to determine the two foremost women in their particular callings.

Through an offer made by the Exposition of Women's Arts and Industries, the two successful candidates will be guests of that organization on a tour of Europe, during which they will visit the showplaces of the old world.

The Atlanta contest, as outlined by Miss Rebecca Shuman, president of the Business and Professional Woman's club of Atlanta, provides that the judges shall be Mayor I. N. Ragsdale, George W. West, president of the chamber of commerce, and Miss Shuman, as chairman of the contest committee.

Pick Your Own.

All civic organizations of the city have been asked to select two candidates, one professional and one business woman of the city, whose accomplishment in her particular field of endeavor establishes her in the status of preeminence. Any individual may also advance a candidate—and the candidate need not be a member of the Business and Professional Woman's club.

The purpose of the selection is to stimulate interest in achievements of business and professional women and to bring attention of the public to their successful careers.

The business woman and the professional woman selected will be the ones who, in the opinion of the judges, have progressed farthest in their chosen fields. And in selecting these two women, such factors shall be taken into consideration as to achievement in their business and profession in the face of educational, physical and economic handicap and their accomplishment in unusual fields which have presented difficulties to women.

May 5 Is Deadline.

Names of all Atlanta candidates must be in the hands of the judges by May 5, accompanied by five typewritten copies of the biography of the candidate, not to exceed 300 words. These names and biographies may be forwarded to Miss Rebecca Shuman, 412 Atlanta National Bank building, Atlanta.

Decision of the Atlanta judges will be made public on May 10 and the names of the two successful candidates will then be forwarded to the state president of the Business and Professional Woman's club. Thereupon, the state committee will judge the two successful candidates from the entire state, these two names to be entered as Georgia's official representatives at the final selection to be made next July during the national convention of the Business and Professional Woman's club of America, at Oakland, Calif.

Contest Opens Now.

The Georgia state committee will be composed of Governor Clifford Walker, the dean of the women of the state university of the appointee, and the state president of the club. This committee will render its decision not later than June 1.

One of the features of the nation-wide poll which is being stressed is that candidates need not be members of the Business and Professional Woman's club. Any person may submit the name of a candidate, or candidates, provided the biographies of 300 words are included. All candidates shall be judged individually on a basis of personal achievement as compared with their status at the beginning of their business or professional careers.

The poll opens with this announcement. Atlanta has any number of preeminent business and professional women. No "red tape" is involved—who's your choice?

Lithonia School Head Elected at Jackson To Succeed R. I. Knox

Jackson, Ga., April 9.—(Special.) Professor R. I. Knox, superintendent of the Jackson public school system since 1922, has resigned to head the public schools at Hartwell. He was recently reelected by the board here but declined to accept. He is one of the best known school men in this part of the state, having served as president of the Sixth District High School association, of which he is now a member of the executive committee.

The board of education at a meeting this week elected D. V. Spencer, now superintendent of schools at Lithonia, to succeed Professor Knox. Professor Spencer, a Jackson boy and graduate of Emory college, in the class of 1913, has taught at Marietta and Sandersville and has been superintendent at Lithonia for the past several years. Other members of the faculty will be named at a later meeting of the board.

Jewels for The Masterpiece
"Woman is the masterpiece," affirmed Confucius, and there are few who will deny the most profound of all Chinese sages.
Wise men perceive that beauty, not idle vanity, makes every woman a lover of fine jewelry. It is the natural affinity between the lovely and utter loveliness.
The house of Freeman presents jewels that belong to women by the divine right of being beautiful. And these gem-pieces may be had for a pleasingly modest sum.

Montgomery-Stewart Wedding Is Brilliant Event in Decatur

One of the most beautiful weddings which has ever taken place in Decatur was that of Miss Mary Will Montgomery to Terah James Stewart, which was solemnized Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock, at the Decatur Presbyterian church, in the presence of a large circle of friends and relatives, with Dr. D. P. McGeachy, pastor of the church, officiating.

Stately palms were banked in the organ loft and on the rostrum, with seven-branched cathedral candelabra on the altar and newel posts.

Large floor vases of Easter lilies stood in the choir loft and in front of the altar.

Southern smilax, festooned with white tulip-shaped electric lights, garlanded the organ loft.

Six single cathedral candlesticks with a spray of Easter lilies attached with bows of white tulle, holding tall tapers, stood in front of the pews. The pews for the families were marked by sprays of Easter lilies and white ribbons.

Miss Cliff Mable presided at the organ, playing Lohengrin and Mendelssohn's wedding march and accompanied Mrs. Russell Haralson, who sang "All for You," and Miss Agnes Adams, violinist, who played Shubert's serenade.

The "Venetian Love Song" was played softly during the ceremony.

The six ushers entered first in pairs, one pair down each aisle, in the following order: Harry Robertson and Roy G. Jones, T. A. Branch, Jr., and H. B. McAuley and M. B. Arnold and E. A. Stubbs.

Bridal Party.

The four bridesmaids and four groomsmen entered next to a bridesmaid down one aisle, and a groomsman down the other in the following order: Mrs. John Weckerling and Cecil Lemon, Mrs. Marvin McFail and Pope Stovall, Mrs. Weckerling and Mrs. McFail wore green taffeta gowns, with basque waists and ruffled bouffant skirts with fluffy green tulle bows with streamers at the waist line on the left side. Hand-made green French flowers were clustered in the hear. of the tulle bows. They carried large pink feather fans to which the bouquets of pastel-colored flowers, showered with lilies were attached. Silver slippers completed their costumes.

Mrs. Walter Dobbins, Jr., and George Beeland entered next, followed by Mrs. Allen Hollinshead and Otis Stewart.

Mrs. Dobbins and Mrs. Hollinshead were gowned like the first two bridesmaids, and they carried large yellow feather fans, having attached pastel-colored bouquets, showered with lilies of the valley.

The matron of honor, Mrs. Thomas Alfred Branch, Jr., the bride's sister, wore green taffeta with a basque waist and ruffled bouffant skirt, having a green tulle bow with streamers at the waist on the left side. In the center of the bow was a cluster of hand-made pink French flowers. She carried a large orchid feather fan, having the bouquet of pastel-colored flowers showered with valley lilies attached.

The two little flower girls, Catherine Bond, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cone Bond and Jacqueline Weckerling, daughter of Lieutenant and Mrs. John Weckerling, wore pink taffeta frocks, ruffled from top to hem. They carried old-fashioned bouquets in the pastel shades.

The deep hem of maline was embroidered with white ribbon roses and vines, as was the maline which was let in the front of the gown. In the center of the roses on the front of the skirt were orange blossoms.

The filmy tulle veil was adjusted to the bride's head with a coronet of orange blossoms, having a spray on either side and a band of orange blossoms across the forehead.

Women Voters' Reception Will Honor Cup Winner

The feature of the meeting of the Eighth Ward League of Women Voters Tuesday, April 12, will be a reception in honor of Mrs. C. W. Harris, winner of the membership cup in the league's recent drive for members. Mrs. Harris is a member of the eighth ward and for several years has done outstanding work in the annual membership drives of the league.

This year Mrs. Harris headed the winning squad which was composed of the following ladies: Mrs. Ben M. Smith, Mrs. W. F. Trenary, Mrs. C. C. Schoen, Mrs. J. B. Billups, Mrs. W. T. Martin and Mrs. C. F. Von Herrmann.

The meeting will take place at the home of Mrs. B. M. Smith, 21 Walker Terrace, at 3 o'clock Tuesday, April 12.

Another ward meeting of the week is the second ward at the Pryor Street school at 3 o'clock Wednesday, April 13. Mrs. W. C. Slate, chairman, will preside and the speaker of the occasion will be Miss Katherine Kock, chairman of the ward officers council. Miss Kock will tell of the work being done in other wards and especially emphasize the especially successfully round table which the eleventh ward initiated and which has been followed in the twelfth ward and in the DeKalb League of Women Voters.

A talk by Mrs. Fred Hodgson will be the feature of the ninth ward meeting Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. F. A. Boston, 914 Virginia avenue, northeast. Mrs. Fred Ardary, vice chairman of the ninth ward will preside.

It is drawing near the time for the council meeting of the National League of Women Voters. Last year at the St. Louis convention, it was voted to discontinue the annual conventions and in off-years to hold a meeting of the council made up of state presidents and one other representative.

The council will begin its session April 26, at the Mayflower hotel which will be the headquarters.

Several changes have been suggested in the program of work, but as the council is quite limited in its power to change the program only such celebrations can occur which come within the definition of "altered conditions."

To the child welfare program, it will be suggested to add the support of legislation promoting establishment and continuance in the state of work for maternity and infancy hygiene.

To the committee on international cooperation to prevent war, will be suggested support of the settlement of internation difficulties by arbitration or other peaceful means, and of treaties having the same end in view.

Study of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act has been recommended by one state league and the board in submitting it points out the scope and complexity of the factors involved.

The point most emphasized in the national league is the obligation of state and local leagues to study proposed changes in the program.

Madge Kennedy Charming

ERLANGER STOCK STAR EXPECTS HAPPY SEASON HERE

In Life as on Stage

By Bessie S. Stafford.

Madge Kennedy is exactly the same adorable and charming young woman in private life as when she portrays "Diana Wynne," the fascinating heroine of "Love in a Mist," only—she is more so.

That's the impression the star of Erlanger's stock company created Saturday afternoon in her apartment at the Georgian Terrace, her home for the next 10 weeks. Miss Kennedy is in love with life, gets a decided thrill out of the theater, and is preparing to enjoy to the utmost her work in Atlanta. She was dressed for the street, bent upon a shopping tour, to select gowns for the five plays already scheduled for future presentation, and as Saturday was her only free day preceding the Monday evening opening performance, she was forced to take advantage of every moment.

She's a Beauty.

Madge Kennedy is a beauty! Her sparkling, appealing brown eyes match her lustrous, naturally wavy auburn hair. No! It isn't bobbed. In fact, Miss Kennedy never succumbed to the fashionable bob. She wears her lovely long tresses in a close-fitting swirl around her shapely head. Her smile is enchanting, while her refreshing, charming manner is entirely free from affectation. Faultless grooming and taste gave silent proof that she likes pretty clothes. And what is more important, knows how to select them! She wore a green georgette crepe gown, its collar and cuffs embroidered in gold threads, a close fitting hat to match, and a darker green topcoat collared in Kolinsky. Brown shoes and a brown bag completed a harmonious ensemble.

Although she does not smoke, this popular Broadway star is by no means prejudiced against those who do, deeming it a matter of personal choice.

She likes to dance and is an accomplished musician, this gift being signified by the baby grand piano in one corner of her living room. She enjoys a bit of social life whenever her profession grants a few leisure moments. But, of course, her greatest interest lies in dramatics.

Questioned About "Tad."

When asked if she brought her Persian cat, "Tad," she regretfully replied in the negative, but described him as a beautiful animal, possessing the heart of an alley cat, for "Tad" is affectionate and playful, characteristics quite contrary to these high-bred pets. "Tad" is in his most mischievous mood when his mistress dons a peach-colored negligee so that he can play with the flowing draperies and train.

Erlanger's stock company star radiates personality and a grand sense of humor, a trait which came to the fore immediately in her conversation. Perhaps the latter has served her well, making Miss Kennedy the artistic comedienne she is today, placing her in the stellar constellation of the theatrical heavens. She is destined to become the general favorite in Atlanta, as leading lady of Erlanger's stock company, for the same understanding of her art that has endeared her to other American audiences.

AS FOUR WOMEN HEAR IT

EUROPE, with its charm of romance and history, is taking its usual command of Atlantans, with Mrs. Troup Howard and Miss Frances Howard making the first dash for foreign shores, leaving Monday, going direct to New York, sailing April 16, on the Scythia. They go direct to London for consultation with court courturiers, so that the white tulle gown Miss Howard wears when she's presented at the second June drawing room of the Court of St. James's by United States Ambassador Houghton, meets the exact requirements of England's beloved Queen Mary, whose particular ideas of court costume risks no deviation.

The Atlanta colony in Paris will be large enough to form a town in itself this summer when Mrs. Eugene Harrington, chaperoning her niece, Miss Hortense Adams, and accompanied by Mrs. Lott Warren, Jr., sailing on the George Washington in July, take up their residence at the Hotel Royal on the Rue de la Mount Parnasse. It's the very same hotel in which Mrs. Roby Robinson, Mrs. Eloise Dickey Robinson and her little daughter are domiciled, and was selected by Mrs. Harrington and Miss Adams because they expect to spend at least six months in the French capital, selecting the old student quarter on the left bank of the Seine near the Hotel des Invalides, where Napoleon was finally laid to rest. The Hotel Royal is well within walking distance of Sorbonne university, where Miss Adams will study languages, and as she and her aunt have traveled abroad before, taking up temporary residence in Paris will be a delightful experience. It will be Mrs. Warren's first trip to Europe, and she is certain to enjoy seeing the French capital under their guidance.

When the Majestic weighs anchor in New York harbor the 24th of June, a most congenial group of Atlantans will be among the passengers, for Mr. and Mrs. Lee Hagen, Miss Julianne Hagen, Mrs. Paul Johnson, Miss Lutitia Johnson, who spent the entire summer of 1896 abroad, and Miss Elizabeth Johnson, a student at Hollins college, augmented by Mrs. Noel Park and Miss Kitty Park, form a party bound on a three months' trip through England, visiting whatever other countries attract their fancy. Mrs. Oscar Pappenheimer will enjoy the luxuries of a cabin de luxe on the Biancamaco, likewise the interesting companionship of Mrs. Frank Foster, to whom Europe is not a foreign land, as a great part of her life has been spent in traveling. They will land in Naples, taking a three months' tour on the continent, but in August, Mrs. Pappenheimer joins Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Lynch at Deauville, as these former Atlantans leave New York April 29 with the intention of spending several months visiting European spas.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Loridans, Mrs. Colquitt Carter and son, Colquitt Carter; Mrs. Lloyd Tompkins and Miss Madeline Keipp will add their names to the passenger list of some European-bound steamer as will many others whose departure is somewhat undetermined at the present writing.

WITHOUT so much as a single line of publicity, the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wallace Lyon was right up to the ceremony at the Second Baptist church at high noon last Wednesday, before anybody even knew the ins and outs of the engagement. Mrs. Lyon's aristocratic family connections in Virginia make her a branch of the Witt family, two of whom were the late Rev. Daniel Witt, known throughout the Old Dominion as "Old Man Eloquent," and Judge Samuel Witt, an eminent and brilliant jurist. The wedding was a "family party," including for the most part Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Byrd and Thomas J. Lyon, the groom's sister and brothers, while the bride's father, brother and sister, Abram A. Witt and Roland Witt, of Bedford City, Va., and Mrs. T. E. Carneal, of Moline, Ill., represented her connections.

A wonderful honeymoon will be spent under the tropical moonlight of our sister state, Florida, Mr. and Mrs. Lyon motoring leisurely to the points which mostly interest them. Included in her trousseau were becoming sport suits, tastefully selected for fishing, riding and golfing, as Mrs. Lyon is very athletically inclined, being a very noted equestrienne, the latter accomplishment being achieved in riding over the hills and dales of Virginia.

Upon their return from a bridal trip, and on taking possession of a handsomely furnished apartment on Ponce de Leon avenue, the bride will find an excellent cook and well-trained butler at her beck and call. When summer comes, and apartment life seems stuffy and limited in space, Mr. Lyon has in readiness a country estate of 100 acres, located on the Chattahoochee river in Roswell, where two fine saddle horses are impatiently awaiting the return of Mr. and Mrs. Lyon.

CAPPING hills and dales, bordering roadways and forests, the dogwood trees are staging a glorified flower show entirely unassisted by the hand of mankind, their beauteous pink and white blossoms fairly reveling in the decorative panorama of nature's art. Perhaps the legend told today will serve to influence against the destruction of trees whose growth is slow and tedious, their flowers immediately withering when plucked.

It blossoms forth around Easter time, startling in its mission to impress upon humanity the story that Christ died upon the Cross of Calvary to make atonement for the sins of the world. The legend of the dogwood typifies the crucifixion, recalling the Biblical story of a terrible procession halting in the spring sunshine to elevate the cross with its divine burden upon Mount Calvary. Three of the four petals form a maltese cross, while each petal bears the imprint of the rusty nail driven into His hands and feet by angry executioners. The serious purpose of the beautiful flowers is suggestive of the agonizing hours Christ suffered on the cross before He arose on the radiant Easter morn King of kings and Lord of lords.

VIEWED from several angles, there is more than passing interest centering in the Philadelphia wedding April 20 of Miss Rebecca Thomson to Christopher Dumphy, of New York and Washington, D. C., for special friends of the groom-to-be Mrs. John Murphy and Miss Katharine Murphy, leaving next week for Atlantic City, promised Mr. Dumphy, while at Palm Beach last month, to lend their presence to the fashionable array of guests.

Then, too, Miss Linda Gordon Donaldson, who made her debut in Philadelphia, and is the bride-elect's first cousin from Bainbridge, is in the Quaker city, the perfection of her grooming catching the eye of a photographer as she sauntered down Rittenhouse square last week wearing a two-piece model in dark green wool.

The marriage of "Chris" and "Becky," as their intimates call them, takes place in the Spruce street town house of Mr. and Mrs. Thomson in the city of brotherly love. Miss Thomson's sister, Loulie, their mother's namesake, who possesses both good form and good taste in matters sartorial, will act as maid of honor, and Maurice Fatio, one of the handsome Palm Beach bachelors, serves as best man. Tony Biddle and Ned McLean will be custodians of the aisles, Mr. Dumpley's friendship for Mr. and Mrs. Conkey Whitehead and his visits to their Pace's Ferry road home, Jaunita, make him no stranger to Atlantans of the younger generation. Those of an older one have an affection for the former Miss Lute Gordon, whose marriage in Atlanta at her uncle's home, the late General John B. Gordon, pronounced her Mrs. Walter Thomson, of Philadelphia, and there is a pardonable pride expressed in her daughter's wedding.

MATRIMONIAL difficulties of several prominent Atlantans seem to be crystallizing, if current reports are true. Whether they are crystallizing into divorce court action or merely into separations, four women have not heard definitely.

The principals involved include at least three (rumor includes even more) of society's most popular young couples, all of whom are members of the same exclusive set. In only one of the disrupted romances does the ill-fated triangle figure, the utmost secrecy surrounding the incompatabilities of the other two.

A sudden westward hegira will probably result from the trying experiences of the divorce courts and the feminine contingent will seek balm in the soothing pleasures of new places, and new faces on the other side of the Atlantic.

EMBODYING so much beauty and grace are the trousseau gowns of Miss Jennie Robinson that it's quite appropriate that each be endowed with a name! A few intimates of this popular bride-elect were privileged to view the exquisite creations that make up the elaborate bridal wardrobe at a recent tea given at the handsome English home in Druid Hills.

Our eyes were first attracted to a stunning dinner gown fashioned of black chiffon over shimmering cloth of silver. Sparkling rhinestones and crystals encrusted the graceful full skirt and bodice. "Nocturne" is the name given the lovely gown which is truly a musical composition appropriate to the night. The spirit of spring is interpreted in the kaleidoscope of delicate and blending shades featuring another dinner gown. "Springtime" is the appellation of this exquisite model which is fashioned of chiffon in the pastel shades of peach and green, with soft cream lace draperies.

After viewing one and another of the beautiful costumes, we were certain that the last was surely the most beautiful. Then, when our eyes discovered a handsome evening gown created only for formal occasions, we were quite positive that it surpassed all others. Veiling cloth of gold, this gorgeous creation was formed of silk net in the new French nude shade—so much in vogue now in Paris. The popular and intriguing name of "Gloria" characterized this handsome costume. A dancing frock displaying the many rainbow hues in chiffon was called "Confetti."

In the group of afternoon gowns our attention was called to a perfect symphony in green trimmed with cream lace, this lovely dress named by its Parisian modiste as the "Bridge Dress."

We hardly think it would be fair just yet to describe the bride-to-be's traveling costume but the name "Fascination" is truly applied to the striking ensemble. As for the wedding gown, even a glimpse was denied the very closest of friends.

"FLAMING youth," that muchly discussed element of twentieth century society, denounced by its elders for the free and careless tendency of the age, followed the manner of entertaining back in the gay nineties when Miss Anne Thomas gave a bicycle party last week in Augusta.

Corralling 50 bicycles for the entertainment honoring a St. Louis visitor, Miss Muriel Dameron, boys and girls donned knickers, mounted bicycles and peddled their way several miles to Lake Aumond, where a picnic supper was served. The procession attracted attention along the route, for nothing like this method of transportation had been seen in several decades.

THE CHRISTENING service of the cunning infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Charlton M. Theus was the occasion of his mother's family journeying in a body from Atlanta to Savannah so as to witness the naming of Charlton Mayer, Jr., Sunday afternoon in St. John's church.

This "little prince" holding sway over the hearts of Mrs. William E. Hawkins, Mrs. Arthur Clarke, Mrs. Cecil B. Strobar and Mrs. John L. Hopkins, his grandmother and aunts, will be baptized into the Episcopal faith at St. John's church Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Strobar as god-mother, Wimberly De Renne and Murray Stewart, Jr., as god-fathers, accepted the religious vows for the bonny little fellow, who is said to resemble his fair mother, the former Miss Will Hawkins.

Witnesses to the services, including a limited company of close friends, were entertained at a tea afterward at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Theus on Abercorn street.

Miss Drewry Weds Thomas P. Thigpen.

Griffin, Ga., April 9.—The marriage of Miss Laura Drewry, of Griffin, and Thomas Paul Thigpen, of Jacksonville, Fla., formerly of Forsyth, was solemnized Saturday at noon at the First Baptist church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Leon M. Latimer, pastor of the church, in the presence of relatives and a large circle of friends.

Mrs. Lamar Walker sang "O Promise Me" and "Until," immediately before the ceremony, Miss Thelma Brisendine organists and accompanist.

Howard Drewry, of Jasper, Ala., and Billy Fitts, of Atlanta, nephews of the bride, were the ushers and entered first taking their places at the altar. They were followed by Miss Willie Drewry, sister of the bride, and only attendant.

Miss Drewry wore a becoming spring model of green georgette, the blouse trimmed in lace and the skirt accordeon plaited. Her picture hat of rust straw trimmed in white ribbon and a silk rose. Her flowers were a shower bouquet of pastel-shaded sweet peas.

The bride entered with her father, Idus N. Drewry, who gave her in marriage, and was met at the altar by the groom and his brother, who was his best man, W. G. Thigpen, of Atlanta. She was a radiantly lovely picture in her exquisite gown of peach-colored crepe Roma and French picture hat. The gown was fashioned along becoming lines, the skirt being accordeon plaited just below the waist. The collar and cuffs wer embroidered in gold threads and there was a tiny band of gold threads at the waist line. Her hat was in the rainbow shades, the green and Milan straw that formed the brim was overlaid with several layers of pastel-shaded silk tulle, the crown of green and tan Milan straw, was hand-painted and had a silk rose at one side. Her shower bouquet was of delicate pink sweet peas.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. Drewry entertained at a luncheon at his home on West Taylor street, the guests including the bridal party, relatives and out-of-town guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Thigpen left during the afternoon on their wedding trip, after which they will make their home in Jacksonville until May 1, when they will be at home in Daytona Beach, Florida.

Mrs. Thigpen's going-away costume was an ensemble suit of green georgette, fashioned two-piece style, a pastel-shaded flower being appliqued on the front of the blouse. The coat of tan kasha cloth, was faced with green kasha, her hat of tan and brown straw being a small, close-fitting model.

Un Mot Ici, Est Bien

MRS. J. J. Harris, Editor Georgia Division, U. D. C.

Albany, one of the most beautiful cities of the south, having opened wide its portals to the council of women's clubs, ran the whole gamut of hospitality and presented a most brilliant pageant of welcome on the opening evening. It was an innovation in the modes of welcome, and the Albany folk are to be commended for the happy thought of presenting to the consciousness of their visitors such a whole-souled welcome in the guise of so much beauty. Many beautiful banners and pennants appeared. To the strains of America, Old Glory was carried high and each heart beat in unison with quickened tempo, and when the loved Stars and Bars marched in to the martial tune of Dixie, the patriotic complex was complete.

The Confederate Flag was carried by George Von Weller, little son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Von Weller, the later being president of the United Daughters of the Confederacy chapter of Albany. This small gentleman of seven years, very much impressed with the dignity and importance of his high office of being official aide to Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, division president of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, was a delight to behold. He was attired in a replica of a Confederate uniform. This impressive little aide, attired in the gray, which ever brings a thrill to one's heart, stood near to Mrs. McKenzie with the Stars and Bars, which she so loyally represents, held high. Miss Cena Whitehead, a state chairman in the division, appeared in the dress her mother wore during the War Between the States. Miss Whitehead and Mrs. Caroline Ticknor Shellman appeared most charming delineators in their period costume of the women of the 60's. Master George Von Weller and Miss Louise McCormack appeared as children of the Confederacy. Tumultuous applause greeted the presentation of the pageant of welcome.

Tea at Iris Court.

To attend the beautiful patriotic tea given by the Daughters of the Confederacy and the Daughters of the American Revolution to the council of the Federation of Women's Clubs last week in Albany was to experience the love of country to the nth degree. Iris Court was the scene of this brilliant function and the charming lady of the manor, Mrs. John Randolf Whitehead, attired in a silken period costume, seemed a modern Galatea conception of a miniature painted on ivory. Mrs. Harold Von Weller and Mrs. C. A. Jones, presidents of the hostess organizations, were charming in the art of dispensing hospitality. Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, accompanied by her official aide, assisted in receiving.

During the afternoon a most beautiful miniature minuet was staged on the lawn at Iris Court by 16 most charming little ladies and gentlemen in period costume. This was most ably presented under the direction of Mrs. Tarver. Iris Court, spacious, beautiful and strictly colonial, is replete in every detail which goes to make a typical southern home. From the entrance with its broad veranda to the back where the grounds are laid with the utmost precision—except for the blossoming of the fragrant iris—the idea is carried out in faithful detail. This historic old place is the pride of Albany and was built by the father of Mrs. Whitehead in 1853—before the travail of the War Between the States.

Mrs. H. O. Ball, president of the Larkin D. Watson chapter, U. D. C., has accepted the appointment of chairman of the Jefferson Davis Historical Foundation for Georgia. Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, who made the appointment, is a member of this committee in the general organization. Literature regarding this department will be issued later. It has been delayed owing to official data not having been received. Mrs. Ball is most efficient and the division will be gratified that she has pledged herself to the work of this department.

Mrs. McKenzie Honored.

Our division president, Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, has an invitation to be present at the Good Roads' association, which will be held in Savannah in June. She will attend as a guest of honor and will make an official address at that time. She has also been invited by Fort Lead to speak at the illiteracy conference on April 13. Thus it is plain that with the passing of the months since her election, Mrs. McKenzie has grown in popularity—if that was possible—and the invitations and honors pour in upon her with more frequency every week.

Owing to bereavement in the home of Mrs. Lee Trammel, the Crosses of Service have been delayed. It is her wish that this explanation be made and that a longer period of time be granted her. We are sure that the Georgia division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, will understand the delay and that the sympathy of the entire organization goes out to Mrs. Trammel in this time of sorrow.

D. A. R. Conference.

Thomaston did itself proud in the matter of entertaining the state D. A. R. conference. It was the state editor's privilege to be present as a guest, and never was a more brilliant evening enjoyed.

The state regent, Mrs. H. M. Franklin, who is a most efficient chairman of programs, made a most brilliant executive and the ease and poise of her gracious bearing were ever a delight. The Georgia division, U. D. C., can well commend the Daughters of the Revolution upon their choice as president, for she was at one time their own division president, being the only woman in the state who bears the distinction of having been at different times state president of both organizations. We must commend Thomaston upon the beauty of the entertainments and its lavish hospitality.

Dawson Chapter Memorial Day Plans.

The Mary Brantley chapter, U. D. C., of Dawson met Friday afternoon, March 25, Mrs. J. M. Rauch, president, presiding. During the business session two important features were brought to the attention of the chapter. Mrs. J. D. Collier presented the plans for the observance of Memorial day. The exercises will be held at the Palace theater. Superintendent J. C. Dixon will introduce the speaker, Rev. M. L. Lawson. Rev. W. L. Wright will lead the closing prayer. Mrs. T. K. Cobb stated that dinner would be served to the veterans, their wives and widows of veterans at the clubhouse.

Miss Minnie Bridges spoke in interest of enrolling the children on the founder's roll and the living veterans in "The Book of Memory." The chapter voted unanimously to enroll all Terrell county veterans.

Hostess At Patriotic Tea

Mrs. John Randolph Whitehead, the lovely owner and chatelaine of Iris Court, one of the handsomest homes in Albany, Ga., which was the scene of a patriotic tea held during the state federation meeting in that place on March 31.

Albany Chapter, U.D.C., Plans Program for Memorial Day

The March meeting of Dougherty County chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy, was held at the home of Mr. Alfred Dees Thursday afternoon, Mrs. H. J. von Weller presiding.

Mrs. Camden Fields gave a beautiful piano solo. Mrs. Helen Smothers' splendid voice was enjoyed in a group of songs, the accompanist being Mrs. Elia Meadors. The "Story of Dixie" was read by Mrs. O. L. Southwell.

L. D. Oglesby, of Stone Mountain Memorial association, was presented and spoke briefly on enrolling the living veterans before the reunion in Tampa. The Daughters will take the matter up at once, in case the families of the living veterans will want the honor of enrolling their own. Miss Mildred Rutherford stands behind this movement to honor the living veterans and will speak on it at Tampa.

By special request Mrs. W. L. Davis gave some reminiscences of her illustrious father, Hon. William E. Smith, using extracts from an article appearing recently which spoke of Mr. Smith as one of the prominent Georgians whose life would be studied by the Daughters of the Confederacy this year. The Albany chapter has two daughters of this prominent southerner among its most active members, Mrs. W. L. Davis and Mrs. William N. Ticknor.

Mrs. von Weller read the program she has arranged for Memorial day. Mrs. Oscar McKenzie, the state president, will be the speaker of the day.

Committees were appointed for Memorial day and arrangements made for selling Georgia flags on that day.

On account of her long and faithful service in U. D. C. work, the chapter voted to indorse the candidacy of Mrs. Trox Bankston, of Covington, for president at the next state convention.

The hostesses for the afternoon were Mrs. Aldred Dees, Mrs. L. G. Cooley, Mrs. Ellioft Muse, Mrs. G. W. Reid, Mrs. Arthur and Mrs. W. E. Rowsey.

Mrs. Kendall Directs Union Bible Club.

Birthday of Lee Is Observed by R. E. Lee Chapter

The 120th anniversary of the birth of Robert E. Lee was observed Wednesday morning with a program at the G. M. C. auditorium, under the auspices of the Robert E. Lee chapter of the U. D. C., at Milledgeville.

Mr. R. W. Hatcher, who is president of the local chapter, presided. She outlined the purpose of the program and introduced the speaker of the day, Rev. George B. Thompson. The address was on "Lee as a Builder." The G. S. C. W. girls sang several selections under the direction of Miss Alice Lenora Tucker. One of the songs was composed by G. S. C. W. students, Miss Eleanor Oliff, of Bainbridge. The U. D. C. president conferred the service cross upon Lieutenant Roy Baisden.

The G. M. C. band rendered the instrumental music for the occasion, ending up the exercises with the immortal "Dixie."

The program was one of the best of the many public things the U. D. C. chapter has sponsored during the past year. The present administration is the most progressive of any in years, and the local organization under the efficient direction of the leader, Mrs. R. W. Hatcher, have sponsored many delightful and instructive public features.

One of the features of the morning's program was the singing of "The Bonny Blue Flag," and other Confederate tunes, by the Children of the Confederacy, who afterwards entertained the Confederate veterans at lunch.

Williams Chapter Holds Meeting.

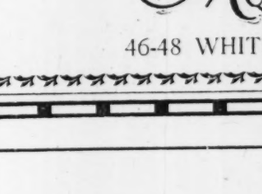

The Mary Ann Williams chapter held its regular meeting the third Thursday in March at the home of Mrs. W. H. Franks, with Mrs. M. F. Quinn, Mrs. E. O. Mize, Mrs. R. H. Mathews and Mrs. Forest English as hostesses. Spring flowers made attractive the spacious rooms. Mrs. Thomas Gilmore, the president, was in the chair.

Plans were made for Memorial day. Mrs. J. J. Harris moved that a box of jellies, cigarettes and other confections be contributed toward a Memorial day box to the veterans of the Soldiers' home in Atlanta. This was unanimously carried. A committee was appointed to collect veteran reminiscences of the War Between the States, to be compiled into a collection.

The rolling chair, property of the chapter, was reported in use by one of the veterans.

An enjoyable program was rendered. Miss Elizabeth Rogers gave a beautiful vocal solo; Mrs. S. G. Lang gave an original poem. "Springtime in Georgia." Mrs Lang followed the poem by a war record of Colonel Lee Warthen.

Dr. Newton spent 38 years in the Orient, during which time he has located in southwestern Japan. He is familiar with the history of China and has visited that area where citizens of this country have been ruthlessly killed in riots recently, and a wonderful insight into the oriental code of morals enables him to throw much light upon their present resentment of foreign invasion. He is also conversant on the subject of "oriental mysticism," popularly called Chinese philosophy.

Dr. Newton is the father of Mrs. J. Marvin Underwood, beloved Atlantan and ardent club worker.

The international relations committee, represented by Mrs. Albert Thornton, Mrs. E. D. McDonald and Mrs. John W. Hardwich, is invited on this occasion to meet with the citizenship department. Mrs. Charles Chalmers, musical director; Mrs. William Calvin Jarnigan, dramatic reader; Mrs. Susan Bowden Johnson, soprano, and A. W. Browning, tenor, will be the artists taking part.

Act I.

In the first act are seen the walls of the Imperial Palace of Pekin—the sun is going down and Pekin is seen in the distance flooded in golden light. In the square, in front of the portico is a crowd of Chinese, listening to a mandarin reading a death decree from the heights of the bastion, in which it is said Turandot, the pure, the chaste shall be the wife of him of noble blood who will be able to solve the three enigmas she will set.

The young Prince of Persia the last who failed to solve the enigmas has been condemned to perish by the sword. The crowd becomes unruly and a man falls to the ground. The young girl who was with him tries to protect him from being trampled under foot. She calls for assistance and a young stranger helps the old man to his feet, and recognizes him as Timurr, his father, the dethroned king of the Tartars.

The young man is Calaf, known only as the unknown prince. They are both strangers in exile, and obliged to hide their identity. The young girl who attends Timurr, is Liu, the slave who secretly loves Calaf. The executioner's assistants are seen sharpening their swords on the bastions. The huge sword is the one to be used to cut off the young Prince of Persia's head.

Approaching is a choir of boys, singing a mournful dirge, and following closely behind is the youthful Prince of Persia, and the dignitaries of the court. The crowd cries out, and begs mercy for the young prince; they appeal to Turandot to have mercy upon him. The unknown prince condemns Turandot for her barbarity.

At this moment she appears on the Loggia like a vision of light. The crowd becomes silent, and falls prostrate to the ground as by enchantment. The unknown prince alone remains standing in ecstasy. Turandot makes an imperious gesture which means death. The executioner nods his head in assent and the procession moves away toward the place of execution. In the deserted square there remain only Timurr, Liu and the unknown prince.

Turandot has disappeared but her beauty has worked its fatal spell on the unknown prince, and he decides to attempt to solve the three enigmas, refusing to listen to his father's plea for him to desist. He is stopped by the dignitaries, as he accepts the challenge and they plead with him—telling him he is hopelessly lost.

Act II.

The curtain rises on a pavillion in the Imperial Palace. The ministers announce that another victim is ready to make the test and die. Scene II of this act features the square outside of the palace and to the latter ascends the grand staircase. There are eight wise men on the staircase each holding three silken scrolls containing the solution to the three enigmas.

The emperor of China enters and is seated on the throne. At the foot of the staircase is the unknown prince, the victim. The mandarin reads the proclamation and the death sentence. Turandot enters, looks at the prince defiantly—addresses the crowd and tells them that centuries ago an ancestor of hers, the flower of her race, Princess Lo-u-ling was carried away by a foreign invader. That she (Turandot) has taken oath to avenge this outrage upon her own lovers and has sworn that no man shall ever possess her. She warns the prince and reminds him the enigmas are three and that death is one.

The prince retorts defiantly, "No, princess, no! The enigmas are three. Life is one!" The first is "hope;" the second, "blood," and the third, "Turandot!" The crowd shouts in exultation! The unknown prince is victorious! Turandot refuses to be beaten and entreats her father to save her from this stranger. Her father reminds her that an oath is sacred and there is no repeal. She pleads with the prince and tells him that she will be his torment. The prince tells her that if she will tell him his name before the dawn of day that he will consent to die.

Act III—Scene I.

Place—palace gardens, near Turandot's apartment.

Heralds announce no one is to sleep that night; that the unknown prince's name is to be revealed before the break of day, under penalty of death. The people plead with the prince to reveal his name. The three ministers offer him love, riches, glory, if he will consent to tell his name; he refuses.

Guards bring in Timurr and Liu, shouting they can reveal his name. The executioner is summoned to torture her and Liu snatches a dagger from the belt of a soldier and kills herself rather than be tortured into revealing his name.

The crowd is moved to pity—and Timurr and the prince mourn over the body of the little slave. Turandot is greatly perturbed and wonders what unseen power lent the girl courage for such heroism. Her body is removed and Turandot and the prince remain alone.

The prince implores her to not be so cold, pure and chaste, but she remains adamant in her determination to avenge her ancestor. The prince tears her veil from her and kisses her passionately. The kiss transforms Turandot and she confesses herself conquered and avows that she has loved him secretly. She begs him to go—and not to seek greater glory—but he tells her his name; that death for her would be his greatest joy.

When she hears that he is Calaf, the son of Timurr, king of Tartars, her pride reasserts itself, and happy in her victory, she will lead him before her people to die.

Scene II.

The day dawns and the trumpets sound. Turandot leads the prince before her people and the emperor. Arriving at the throne she cries: "August father! . . . I know the name of the stranger . . . then softly whispers, "His name . . . Love." The lovers embrace. The people scatter flowers and sing, "The Light of the World Is Love." . . . "Love!"

Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, president, urges all members and their friends to attend. The operalogues are free to members, all others are 50 cents admission.

Mr. and Mrs. McPherson Donate Handsome Morningside Home As State Headquarters for Christian Temperance Union

M. FRANCES MEADORS BURGHARD.

"'Do you believe in dreams?' 'Why, yes and no. When they come true, then I believe in them.'"

According to the reasoning of the poet, the Georgia Woman's Christian Temperance union believes in dreams. In January 1926, when Mrs. Mary Harris Armor was state president, the dream of the members of this growing organization came true in the establishment of state headquarters in a suit of rooms in the Macon National Bank building in Macon. There was great rejoicing, and messages of congratulations were received from every state in the union.

In March, 1927, during the administration of Mrs. Marvin Williams, of Atlanta, the dream of the W. C. T. U. to own permanent headquarters worthy of the organization becomes a realization. For Mr. and Mrs. N. C. McPherson, of Atlanta, have given their handsonme home with its spacious grounds to the Georgia W. C. T. U. for permanent headquarters, and the gift has been formally and gratefully accepted by the official board.

Much of the dreaming for headquarters, also much of the agitating, and much of the praying was done during the presidency of Mrs. Lella A. Dillard, of Emory university.

New State Headquarters.

State headquarters is located at 1436 Highland avenue in the beautiful Morningside section of Atlanta, adjacent to Druid Hills, the choice residental section. The land is conservatively appraised at $15,000 and improvements including the red brick home, grounds, garages and servant's house at $15,000, making a total value of the property $30,000. "Atlanta, like ancient Rome, is a city set upon hills; but instead of seven, the number is seven times seven, or more. The McPherson home is on one of those hills," wrote Mrs. Dillard in the current Georgia W. C. T. U. Bulletin.

"One approaches the house by a driveway, and walk from the driveway—if one is walking—through a terraced garden of beautiful shrubs and flowers; hedge trees trimmed into hedge balls, rhododendron, hydrangea, spirea, forsythia, roses, lilacs, old fashioned snow balls, and many other plants that delight beauty loving eyes. The driveway leads to the porte cochere at the right end of the long veranda across the front of the house.

"After ascending a few granite steps between abutments of granite, one stops on the veranda to look back before entering the house, to enjoy the view of lovely homes and grand trees in Druid Hills, against a background of blue skies typical of Piedmont Georgia."

On the first floor there are three large rooms opening into each other making one spacious apartment—the living room, the dining room and the semi-circular sun parlor, then there is a sitting room, breakfast room, kitchen, pantry, bath and hall.

On the second flor are four bedrooms and a long sleeping porch extending across the back of the house, with all conveniences. The big basement with cement floor and walls may be used for more than the furnace and fuel.

The deed to this splendid property will be turned over to the W. C. T. U. just as soon as the organization finishes raising an endowment fund of $15,000, which fund is well begun, and without which the gift would be burdensome.

The state convention meeting in Gainesville last fall decided to "raise a permanent headquarters fund of $30,000 this year, or as soon thereafter as possible, by securing Founders and Builders; the Founders to pay $1,000 each, and the Builders $100 each; also by selling certificates for stock until the supply on hand is exhausted." A good start has been made of both Founders and Builders, and stock certificates have been sold also.

The state headquarters will remain in Macon in the same suite, with Miss Ruby Rivers in charge, until the endowment fund has all been secured.

It is a busy place, for there is great demand for W. C. T. U. literature which is so comprehensive in its various departments, and for other supplies kept in stock at headquarters.

The Donors.

Since Mrs. McPherson has been president of the Druid Hills W. C. T. U., its membership has increased by hundreds, and her name appeared in the this week's Union Signal, the National W. C. T. U. paper, as the first volunteer membership captain in Georgia to gain ten new paid members in the present membership campaign which began the first of this month. She also has the honor of being chosen president of the Fulton county W. C. T. U.

Mrs. McPherson has represented Georgia at National W. C. T. U. conventions in Los Angeles, Detroit, Philadelphia, Columbus, Ohio, Chicago and others, where she had a part in the Georgia or the departmental demonstrations.

Mr. McPherson is a successful business man, an honorary member of the Druid Hills W. C. T. U. and a life member of the Georgia W. C. T. U. Their daughter, Mrs. Robert H. McDougall, Jr., is state secretary of the Loyal Temperance legion and the National Prohibition Guards, the children's temperance organizations. Mr. and Mrs. McPherson are Christian philanthropists, working unitedly.

"For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that they can do."

Georgia White Ribboners are deeply grateful for their magnificent gift. It has embued both leaders and members with a renewed determination to live up to the year's slogan, Hold Fast and Go Forward.

"55 YEARS IN ATLANTA"

Killen-Adams Wedding in Macon Beautiful Home Ceremony

A marriage of interest throughout the south, owing to the prominence of the two families, was that of Miss Margaret Killen, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Killen, of Macon, and J. W. Adams, Jr., also of Macon.

The ceremony was performed Thursday at high noon at the home of the bride's parents on Georgia avenue. The entire lower floor was thrown open and beautifully decorated. At one end of the drawing room were banked stately palms forming a background for the tall standards of Easter lilies and cathedral candelabra holding lighted tapers.

As the guests assembled Crockett Odom, pianist, and Walter Burke, violinist, fraternity brothers of the groom, played "At Dawning."

Bridal Party.

For the entrance of the bridal party Mendelssohn's wedding march was played. Descending the stairs, advancing through the aisle of white tulle and taking their places on each side of the altar were the junior attendants, Miss Clara Davis Adams, sister of the groom, and Eugene Killen, young brother of the bride. Miss Adams' dainty frock was of pink flat crepe embroidered with rose buds. Her hat was of pink neapolitan straw and she carried a small bouquet of Columbia roses.

Following the junior attendants came the bridesmaid and groomsman, Miss Sara Cobb Adams, another sister of the groom, and Tim J. Killen, Jr., of West Palm Beach, Fla., brother of the bride. Of pale green georgette fashioned with tight bodice and full skirt and trimmed with gold embroidered net was Miss Adams' lovely frock. Her hat was of green neapolitan straw trimmed with ribbon, the only ornament on it was a rhinestone. Miss Adams carried an arm bouquet of pink sweet peas.

Miss Mary Hall, the maid of honor, descended the stairs alone. She was lovely in a two-piece frock of rose-beige flat crepe, its chic lying in its simplicity. Her hat was a small rose-beige crochet straw and she carried an arm bouquet of Columbia roses.

Beautiful Bride.

The bride entered with her father, T. J. Killen, who gave her in marriage. She was very lovely in a frock of French blue flat crepe fashioned with tiered skirt and trimmed in silver. With this she wore a tiny hat of pink. Her beautiful bouquet was of Ophelia roses showered with lilies of the valley.

The bride and her father were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Arthur L. Burnet, Jr., and the ceremony was performed by Dr. William F. Quillian, president of Wesleyan college, a fraternity brother of the groom. During the ceremony Drdla's "Souvenir" was softly played.

Wedding Breakfast.

After the wedding Mr. and Mrs. Killen entertained informally at breakfast. Receiving with them were Mr. and Mrs. Adams, members of the bridal party and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Adams, parents of the groom.

Mrs. Killen wore a lovely two-piece gown of beige Elizabeth crepe. Her shoulder corsage was of pink sweet peas.

Of tan flat crepe, pleated, was the gown worn by Mrs. Adams, mother of the groom. Her flowers were pink sweet peas.

The exquisitely appointed dining table, which was overlaid with a handsome cover of lace, had as its center decoration a low basket filled with Columbia roses, pink snapdragons and sweet peas. At one side was the bride's cake beautifully embossed. Placed at intervals on the table were silver trays filled with cakes and candies. Four silver candlesticks held pink tapers. Presiding at the coffee service at one end of the table was Mrs. D. Sidney Wagnon.

During the early afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Adams left on a motor trip. Upon returning to Macon they will be at home at the Massee apartments.

Prominent Guests.

Among the out-of-town guests at the wedding were the bride's aunt, Mrs. William E. Hawkins, of Atlanta; her uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Clark, of Atlanta; Mr. and John Sheffield, Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Wright, Mr. and Mrs. William A. Hawkins, of Americus; Mr. and Mrs. C. J. White and family, of LaGrange; Mrs. W. B. Adams, of Moultrie, grandmother of the groom; his uncles, Elmore Adams and Jim Adams, of Thomaston; Mr. and Mrs. Grady Adams, of Moultrie; Sion Hawkins and Eugene Hawkins, of Atlanta and California.

Miss Mary Douglas presented a number of pupils from her violin school in a studio recital Friday afternoon, in the Wesley Memorial building.

Those taking part were Miss Katherine Boolukos, Miss Mildred Pannell, Miss Rachel Burnett, Miss Mary Alice Shelton, Miss Spencer McGaughey, Miss Evelyn Rivers, Marvin Launius, Lawrence Hays, George Freeman, Joseph Burnett, Fred Borg, Billy Wall, George Sutton, Ralph Berman, Fred Sutton, Raymond Goff, Willis Sutton, Jr. The accompanists were Mrs. Paul O'Neal and Miss Ruth Mary McGaughey.

Alumni Association Gives Entertainment.

The Alumni Association of the Simplex Shorthand school met at the chamber of commerce hall Thursday evening. Miss Helen Freeman prepared a most delightful program including selections by Ben Wiseberg, Bob Weston and Charles Mullings on their banjos. Mr. Haldane read a cursory and humorous report of current events. Miss Daisy Chotas, at the piano, and her brother, Nick Chotas, violinist, rendered several numbers, and on finishing the playing of "The Indian's Love Call," Chief Mahwhom entered in native costume and spoke upon Indians and their reactions to civilization. Chief Mahwhom was Mr. Paul, who spoke through the courtesy of the Sears-Roebuck company. Mrs. Clark provided refreshents and a floor for informal dancing.

Miss Farie's Atlanta Debut Takes Place at Howard Theater

Miss Cynthia Farie, beautiful daughter of Mrs. John Farie, of Savannah, Ga., who will sing at the Howard theater this week in "The Book of Dreams," under the stage name of "Cynthia Farr."

Gifted Cynthia Farie, of Savannah, Ga., talented young artist, will receive sincerest welcome by her host of Atlanta friends, when she appears at the Howard theater this week, in John Murray Anderson's beautiful stage production, "The Book of Dreams."

Miss Farie is the daughter of Mrs. John Farie, of Savannah, who was formerly Miss Mary Turner, of Atlanta. She is descended from a distinguished line of southern ancestry, and through her mother belongs to one of Atlanta's most prominent families. Her grandfather, the late Dr. J. D. Turner, beloved Atlanta physician, was a leading financier and constructive citizen of this section.

Miss Farie, whose stage name is "Cynthia Farr," and her partner, Miss Margery Mackay, of California, will render every vocal number in the spectacular "Book of Dreams." The twain have been close friends for a number of years, and although living together and having studied under the same teacher, each pursued her own course, Miss Farie singing in the Gilbert and Sullivan repertoire at the same time Miss Mackay was in "The Miracle" cast. Through the advice of Miss Rosalie Stewart, well-known theatrical manager, these gifted artists appeared together in Keith's vaudeville, as headliners, in their own original act, under Miss Stewart's direction, making an instantaneous hit. Following their tour, they signed with the Publix theater, to appear in "The Book of Dreams."

For 15 months, previous to this, Miss Farie had a part in the "Vagabond King," a successful Broadway production, in which she led the ensemble. She possesses a wonderful soprano voice, and studied under the best masters in this country as well as Europe.

Miss Farie is looking forward with the keenest anticipation to her engagement in Atlanta, and will renew many delightful friendships in Atlanta, which are her natural inheritance from her aristocratic maternal relatives.

American Forest Week Will Be Observed by Essay Contest

American Forest week has been proclaimed for nation-wide observance beginning April 24 and lasting through April 30 by President Coolidge, who recommends recognition of the week to the leaders in each of the 48 states. Canada will join the United States this year in observance of the week.

American Forest week marks the high tide of the year in the conservation activities of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the largest woman's organization observing this week. Tens of thousands of trees are being planted each year by clubwomen and California and Washington clubwomen are raising huge sums for the purchase of virgin forests for memorial park purposes. Memorial groves, roads of remembrance and individual trees have been planted to honor those who gave their lives in the great world war.

Mrs. Tom Brooke, chairman of applied education of the Atlanta Woman's club and also vice president of the Atlanta Camp Fire Girls, will observe Forest week by conducting a contest for the Camp Fire Girls and by awarding two scholarships for the two best essays on "The Need of Reforestation in Georgia."

B. M. Lufburrow, state forester, chose this subject for the contest and wishes it known that information and literature on the subject may be obtained in the forestry department at the state capitol.

All essays must be mailed to Mrs. Robert B. Cunningham, 1115 Peachtree street, Atlanta, and must be in not later than April 25. The contest is open to Camp Fire Girls who have personally planted a tree or who belong to a Camp Fire group which has planted a tree or trees. Essays must be limited to 500 words, as longer themes will not be accepted.

The winners of the scholarships will be announced Friday, April 29. The scholarships which are to be given for the two best essays will entitle the winners to one week of camp at the Camp Fire Girls' summer site at Toccoa Falls, Ga. In the event they wish to attend the entire three weeks of camp they will have to pay for only two weeks.

Camp begins June 13 and continues through July 3, and the winners in the contest will have the privilege of selecting their own date for the week given to them by the committee.

Meeting of Uncle Remus Memorial Association.

The Uncle Remus Memorial association met April 5 at "The Wren's Nest." The president, Mrs. A. McD. Wilson, is in Tampa, where she has been attending the veterans' reunion, and in the absence of Mrs. E. L. Connally, presided. Owing to the protracted illness of Dr. Connally, Mrs. Connally has been unable to attend any of the meetings this winter and she was given a most cordial welcome.

Many interesting items of business came up for discussion, conspicuous among them being the much-needed repairs in the Wren's Nest. A committee to take this matter under consideration was appointed as follows: Mrs. T. S. Sells, chairman; Miss Sally Brown, Mrs. H. G. Hastings, Mrs. Arthur Hazzard, Mrs. Arthur Hale, Mrs. Banks Whiteman.

Mrs. Mary Park, of Eatonton, the home town of Joel Chandler Harris, sent a "Remus doll" as a gift to the mascot of the association, little Sally Patrici Connally, the granddaughter of Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Connally. It was decided to launch a campaign for new members and reenlist the old friends. A booth will be sponsored at the May festival by the former queens, at which membership cards will be sold. Miss Elizabeth Camp, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Camp and youngest grandchild of the distinguished Joel Chandler Harris and Mrs. Esther LaRose Harris, has been chosen to be the queen at the annual May festival to be held on Snap Bean farm.

A novel feature of the festival this year will be a baby show, which will be held on the grounds prior to the ceremonies attending the crowning of the queen. Mrs. H. G. Hastings, the second vice president, is chairman of the baby show, with Mrs. Arthur Hale as co-chairman. Registration fee is 25 cents and can be made at once with Mrs. Arthur Hale at the Wren's Nest.

A letter from Mrs. Julia Cope thanking the association for their cooperation in the authors' grove at Piedmont park was read. A tree of the tulip poplar species was planted in the grove to the memory of Joel Chandler Harris.

'Constitution Hall' Is Subject Of Mrs. Russell Magnas' Spech

Mrs. Russell William Magna, of Holyoke, Mass., national vice president general D. A. R. and national chairman of Constitution Hall finance committee, was a distinguished visitor to the Thomaston conference, he address on "Constitution Hall" bringing to Georgia D. A. R.'s the magnitude of this undertaking. She says:

"The Daughters of the American Revolution and the country at large are keenly interested in the enormous undertaking of building a new auditorium which will be called Constitution Hall. This hall is to be built on a piece of property already owned by the society at the immediate rear of the present D. A. R. buildings in Washington. The building is to cost approximately $2,600,000. One million of this was put out in a bond issue at 6 per cent and all the bonds sold.

"To obviate the possibility of placing the society in debt the other million is being raised so as to have this amount in cash before starting any work. It is being raised by the states purchasing boxes at a cost of $15,000 each and by disposing of the chairs in the new hall at $150 each, the purchaser being able to place an inscription of 100 letters on a 3x6 marker on the back of the chair. Further the foundation is being disposed of at $1 a cubic foot and many free-will gifts are being given as contributions. The national officers are sensing the general support of the entire country in this project, as undoubtedly the forthcoming continental congress will be able to report approximately a half a million dollars collected.

Hall Is Necessary.

Constitution Hall is a necessity owing to the tremendous growth of the society, which increases its membership at the rate of 100 new members a month. It has been said that the Daughters of the American Revolution, because founded on past ancestry, were not up-to-date and cared little for the future. This is not so. For years this organization has stood for and promoted every phase of Americanization and patriotic education. Being chartered under the United States government, it is back of every movement that is for the best interest of the country. The Daughters of the American Revolution are constructionists and have nothing to do with anything of a destructive nature, whether it be in political or literary life or organization work. No woman can become a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution unless she takes the oath of allegiance to her country and swears to uphold the constitution of the United States. That she is a pure American is an indisputable fact.

"Just so long as a society is based upon this kind of eligibility, so it cannot limit its membership, but must embrace to its fullest extent every woman that is eligible. The potential growth means that each department of the national work as well as membership is moving forward with daily progress. Just so long as the society is represented by delegates, those delegates must be taken care of. This Constitution Hall will do. The new building will also contain a much needed library which will be the finest genealogical library of its kind probably in the world. This will enable the present library in Memorial Continental Hall to be used to enlarge the museum. The proposed new building will have a floor capacity of 4,000 seats surrounded by 54 boxes. Two substantial reasons for this number of seats are: First, that the society owns only land enough to place a building of this size on it, and second, that 4,000 seems an adequate number for a debating body.

"The present beautiful Memorial Continental Hall, dear to the heart of every daughter, cannot be enlarged without destroying the architecture of the present building, and then, too, it holds a very great sentimental value to the organization. It will continue to be used as at present. And there is plenty of room and call for such a new building as the daughters contemplate.

Work of Society.

"The great work of the society demands this proper housing. And as each committee is corelative with the others there is no question but when making the vision of Constitution Hall a reality will promote, enlarge and develop every splendid committee in the greatest organization of women in the country. The national chairman anticipates reporting half a million dollars collected, all of the boxes pledged and more than one-half paid for, two thousand chairs disposed of and thousands of cubic feet. Granted that the desired million is in the hands of the society by a year from this time, the corner stone laying exercises would in all probability take place the week of April 19, 1928."

Woodbury Missionary Society Holds Meeting.

Twenty members responded to the unique invitations, ("umbrellas" to keep off the "April showers") for the April meeting of the Missionary society of the Methodist church, Mrs. Anthony, hostess. Mrs. Thompson, of Manchester, a temporary resident gave the Bible lesson, and stressed the spiritual truths.

Mrs. Joe Chunn read the poster "Let Not Thine Hands Be Slack."

Mrs. Herbert Jones had charge of the program including poem, "Give Ye Them To Eat;" Miss Bessie Waddell, "The Enlarged Life of Women;" Mrs. M. A. Sutton, "The New Opportunities in the Church for Women;" Mrs. Steve Owen, "Are Women Meeting Their New Responsibilities?" Mrs. D Melton. In absence of Mrs. Clements Mrs. W. D. Owen read "The Responsibility of Church Women in the Community;" Mrs. Johnson Gave the poem, "The Heathens Are So Far Away. "An Easter Message" was feelingly given by Mrs. John Jones; Mrs S. Owen and Miss Leyla Waddell sang "The Old Rugged Cross."

The contest, "Look Upon the Fields," was planned to familiarize those present with the mission fields, the letters in Poland, Belgium, etc., being transposed to be rearranged. The score cards, hand-painted tulips (work of the president), were in harmony with the lovely spring blossoms used as decorations.

Miss Birdie Anthony and Mrs. T. Knight served refreshments. Mrs. Jarrell, president of Greenville society, and Mrs. F. B. Sutton were visitors.

Georgia D.A.R. Regent Gives Execellent Convention Report

Mrs. Herbert M. Franklin, of Tennille, whose report given at the twenty-ninth state D. A. R. conference held in Thomaston was an excellent delineation of the work in which this patriotic organization is engaged. Mrs. Franklin is Georgia's regent, and ended her first term of office at the conference over which she graciously presided.

By Mrs. Herbert M. Franklin, State D. A. R. Regent.

We are highly honored at this state conference to have with us our distinguished president general, Mrs. Alfred J. Brosseau, of Greenwich, Conn. She is our commander-in-chief, the "Washington' of the Daughters of the American Revolution! Like Washington, she is first in war against all enemies of our country, first in peace in spreading the doctrine of loyalty to home and flag, and first in the hearts of every true Daughter of the American Revolution, especially in Georgia!

Seldom does any conference assemble such a galaxy of stars as the distinguished guests with us today. We are indeed fortunate to include among our guests Mrs. Russell William Magna, vice president general and chairman of Constitution Hall. Not only is she gifted as a builder, as she lays her plans for this splendid structure, but she is a painter who pictures in delightful rythm and wreathes with lovely flowers of poesy Constitution Hall, the ideal of her dreams.

We have with us laso the state regent of South Carolina, Mrs. William B. Burney, a loyal D. A. R., who is ever ready to enter heart and soul into all work of our organization. She knows all about the southern hospitality which we would extend today in a great verbal bouquet, bright and fragrant with love and cordiality.

The white rose of the Old South,
The crimson of the New,
The violet of North and South,
The red, the white, the blue.

Follow the Flag.

Our Georgia writer, Bickers, says: "The leader in the fight urged his men to battle with the shout 'Follow the Flag!' But there are those in the ranks and those who wear the uniform of officers who have a better slogan, 'Carry the Flag!'" I wish to express sincere appreciation of the hearty cooperation which you have given your state regent. At all times you have helped me to carry the flag. Soon after election it was my happy privilege to attend Continental congress, where the Georgia delegation, 60 strong, was overjoyed to see our own Mrs. Julius Talmadge lead the ticket when she was elected vice president general.

My first duty after congress was to appoint committees for the work of the year, and we were careful to see that every chapter in the state was represented on some committee. The state corresponding secretary sent out a request that names of all chapter regents be sent at once for the proceedings. According to our by-laws, elections should takep lace in May. We regret very much that many chapters sent names too late for the proceedings, and as the literature is sent by state and national chairmen to the regent whose name appears there, these chapters may not have received their mail so promptly. Let us do better this year and send list of chapter officers as soon as election takes place to our state regent, state recording secretar and to the organizing secretary general at Memorial Continental Hall.

In June your state regent received a letter from Mrs. Alexander Ennis Patton, general chairman of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the sesqui centennial. She stated that the D. A. R. of each of the thirteen original colonies had been requested to serve as hostesses at the Washington house on High street. Georgia sent her contribution of $75, which was requested from each state, and was assigned the time from November 15 to 27. A committee was appointed to serve as hostesses and Georgia was well represented, not only by our own committee, but by two former Georgians, Mrs. Howard Harvey, regent Valley Forge chapter at Norristown, Pa., and Mrs. Frank P. Hean, of that chapter, formerly of the Samuel Reid chapter at Eatonton.

On October 11 a tree representing each of the thirteen colonies was planted on Independence square, Philadelphia, and at the request of Mrs. Patton your state regent sent a generous spadeful of Georgia soil to be placed around the roots of the Georgia tree. As time was limited, I sent soil from my own tenth district, which is historic in that this is the only district in Georgia which has been the home of three of our early state capitals, Augusta, Louisville and Milledgeville. Later Miss Annie Lane, of Washington, Ga., sent a cup of soil from the battlefield of Kettle Creek, so this was also placed at the root of our tree.

In September a letter was received which was addressed to state Daughters of the American Revolution, Atlanta, Ga. It was forwarded to your state regent and proved to be from a tourist who desired a picture of a historical old church with a tablet describing it as the "Cradle of the Revolutionary Spirit in Georgia." We recognized Old Midway and requested Mrs. John W. Daniel, regent of the Savannah chapter, to send the picture.

Another letter addressed to State D. A. R., Atlanta, came from the Illinois State Historical library at Springfield, and was an order for our historical collections published last year, the Lucy Cook Peel Memorial. This was forwarded by your regent to Mrs. W. F. Dykes, chairman.

In November our state executive board was delightfully entertained by the Joseph Habersham chapter, of Atlanta, of which chapter your state regent was formerly a member. Mrs. Charles Loridans, regent and member of the Joseph Habersham chapter, made the occasion most enjoyable for all in attendance. A beautiful luncheon was given and after the board meeting the Atlanta chapter gave a brilliant reception. During the meeting Governor and Mrs. Clifford Walker placed on exhibition at Habersham hall a large oil painting which had just been presented to Georgia by the Earl of Shaftesbury. This is an artist's copy of one of the most famous historic paintings in existence and represents a meeting of the colony trustees with Yamacraw Indians. The fourth Earl of Shaftesbury, ancestor of the present earl, was a member of the trustees of the colony of Georgia. The picture is a magnificent full size copy of the original which hangs in the private collection at St. Giles House, England, the ancestral home of the Earl of Shaftesbury. Your state regent wrote a letter of thanks in your behalf to Governor and Mrs. Walker for giving our board the opportunity to see this splendid picture. As your representative, I wrote also the Earl of Shaftesbury expressing appreciation of the D. A. R. for his gift to Georgia. In reply received the following:

"St. Giles House, Dorset, December 27, 1926.

"Dear Madam: I have to acknowledge with many thanks receipt of your most kind letter of December 2 and thank you also for the friendly terms in which you express appreciation of the picture. I am so pleased you like it."

In accordance with a resolution passed by the executive board a Wakefield committee was appointed. The chairman and her committee immediately began work and many chapters gave Wakefield programs in February. In her fall message your state regent had outlined requirements for the honor roll and to the list the board added an honor roll subscription to the D. A. R. Magazine. Many chapters have subscribed and are enjoying the greatly improved magazine. Mrs. Julius Talmadge is national chairman and Mrs. John A. Perdue our enthusiastic state chairman.

Patriotic Education.

On account of bereavement, our state first vice regent, Mrs. W. M. Coney, resigned the chairmanship of patriotic education, and Mrs. Richard P. Brooks, of Forsyth, was appointed state chairman. Each chairman whose work comes under this head has worked with zeal. The Fannie Trammel Memorial, a $5,000 loan fund for boys and girls, has received splendid contributions. The $5,000 loan fund for the Georgia State Woman's college at Valdosta has received special attention. Gift scholarships amount to nearly $9,000. Georgia has contributed to Martha Berry, Tomassee, other national schools, to Meadow Garden, Kenmore, Caroline Scott Harrison memorial, etc. Of our $5,000 student loan fund completed last year, $750 is used as a revolving fund and the remaining $4,250 was invested in auditorium bonds. The combined loan funds in Georgia amount to over $20,000. Patriotic lectures have been used in a number of schools and our committee on patriotic songs has been especially diligent, so that many prizes have been offered to the schools for best singing. Our text book committee is ever on the alert to discover book which are not loyal. Forest rebuilding and forest protection have engaged our attention and many trees and shrubs have been planted along our highways and public parks. All special patriotic days have been observed by our chapters. Girls' home making chairman reports increased interest and marked enthusiasm is shown in international relations.

Our state chairman of creeds and correct use of the flag has made earnest efforts and many copies of them and the constitution have been distributed. The flag lessons have proved helpful and instructive. Our state chairman reports 57 historic post cards sent in and medals and prizes valued at $630 have been reported. Many valuable historical papers have been sent by the chapters. The state chairman Children of the Republic reports encouragingly of a club in her home town, Hartwell, and gives most interesting plans used by this club. She also reports a second club organized for children. Sons and Daughters of the Republic by the principal of the negro school in Hartwell. He is a graduate of Oxford, England, and is serving as a missionary in his work among the negroes, being a native West Indian. It is a splendid idea to get the negroes interested.

Our chairman on cooperative relations between D. A. R. and S. A. R. reports a gratifying increase in the number of S. A. R. citizenship medals given in Georgia. Thirty-eight medals have been reported given for best essays. Recently on a visit to Milledgeville we heard an officer of the Sons of the Revolution state that every member had to get some D. A. R. to make out his application paper, so that shows quite a cooperative spirit.

Historic Spots.

Many historic spots, old trails and post roads have been located and marked. The state chairman of preservation of historic spots reports following markers erected. One by Sparta chapter to mark place where a treaty was made between the Creek Indians and state of Georgia. Marker to commemorate the battle of Burke Jail, erected by Waynesboro chapter. Cutnbert chapter marked site of the first church in that county. Dublin chapter unveiled a handsome marble seat in memory of the Laurens county world war dead. Sunbury chapter at Winder, with 21 members, has erected four markers within seven months, the last at the intersection of the old Milledgeville road and Bankhead highway. Milledgeville chapter unveiled a marker on the grave of the revolutionary soldier, Francis Boyakin, and our youngest chapter, John Ball chapter of Irwinton, unveiled a marker on the grave of Robert Barnett, a revolutionary soldier.

The Major General Samuel Elbert chapter of Tennille has placed government markers on three graves, but they have not yet been unveiled. This make 18 graves marked by this chapter. One of our neighbor states took a whole page in the D. A. R. Magazine to tell about six markers, so how much space will Georgia require to tell of her 13?

Americanization.

Americanization is another great undertaking, and the immigrant's manual distributed through our organization has proven of inestimable value. Ours is the task to instill into the foreign element proper respect for our country and the great flag of our nation. An outstanding occasion of the year was the good citizenship meeting in Savannah under the auspices of the three Savannah chapters Daughters of the American Revolution. The Lucas theater was filled for the occasion, the Central of Georgia railroad band furnished inspiring patriotic music. American and foreign born united with the regents, Mrs. J. W. Daniel, Savannah chapter; Mrs. J. W. Rourk, Bonaventure chapter; Mrs. J. R. Fawcett, vice regent Lachlan McIntosh chapter, to make a splendid success of the meeting. Your state regent had the honor to preside and the principal address of the occasion was delivered by Governor-elect L. G. Hardeman. His charming wife, too, made a delightful talk when introduced. Our president general recommended these good citizenship meetings and this occasion would have been a great joy to her. Our national defense chairman and preparedness committee have done splendid work in keeping out of our schools and colleges lecturers who would spread propaganda of pacifism and socialism.

In Augusta and Savannah, possibly other places, when foreigners take the oath of allegiance to the United States members of the D. A. R. are present, make patriotic addresses and endeavor to impress them with principles of loyalty to our country which is to be "cherished in all our hearts, to be defended by all our hands." Our chairman of anti-tuberculosis Red Cross seals has been active in the sale of seals.

Constitution Hall.

Last year Georgia paid for her box in the new national auditorium, purchased 37 chairs and bonds amounting to $16,950. No more bonds are on sale, but during the year 21 chairs have been purchased by chapters at $150 each and the board agreed to purchase three chairs in honor of Mrs. Julius Talmadge, vice president general; Mrs. Howard McCall, ex-vice president general, and Mrs. Herbert M. Franklin, state regent. Cubic feet of foundation have been on sale at $1 per cubic foot and 98 cubic feet are reported, $98. There may be other sales which have not yet been reported.

Genealogical research and preservation of records.

Genealogical Research and Preservation of Records.

Every year our chapters are realizing more and more the urgent necessity of searching out and preserving old records. Quite a valuable book has been published recently by Judge L. W. Rigsby, of Cairo. The book is entitled "Home and Family" and a large part of the volume was written by Miss Willie Catherine Ivey, of Tennille, member of the Major General Samuel Elbert chapter. The first part of the book contains suggestive exercises for use in the home in the development of the character of children. Part 2 is the pioneer family record reference chart, being a modern method of preserving family records with biographical sketches and photographs with a complete system of references and index to the different sections of the chart, and also to the vital statistics, records and other public records. The genealogy of a member of Georgia families is included in the book, the subject of Miss Willie Ivey's sketch being ancestry and posterity of Dr. John Taliaferro and Mary Hardin Taliaferro, with notes on many allied families. A copy of this valuable volume has been presented to our organization for Memorial Continental Hall library.

Lucy Cook Peel Memorial.

Our chapters have contributed generously to the Lucy Cook Peel memorial and by consent of the chairman and your state regent our historian, Mrs. John L. Davidson, spent several weeks in Augusta just before conference copying old records which were in quite a dilapidated condition and would soon be destroyed by the ravages of time. Our state chairman reports that 75 rosters (according to original) have been compiled, 64 of these have been bound. Our state registrar reports 24 rosters, seven of these revised form. Sixty-two lineage books and two index volumes have been sent by the chairman to the state registrar.

Our state chairman is live and wide awake and our chapters are manifesting great interest in educational and patriotic pictures. Many report benefit pictures. Our state chairman of legislation has responded to the request of our president general in special legislative action of national importance and has worked with the state legislative council of our organizations for the interest of D. A. R. plans. Many valuable books have been contributed to the Georgia shelf at Memorial Continental Hall. Georgia's total membership as listed in the March Magazine is 5,146. Many new members have been gained during the year, though we have lost a number by death, removal from the state and other causes. Our organizing chairman is ever on the alert and has several prospective chapters. Mrs. Stewart Colley has been appointed by the state regent as organizing regent at Grantville. Her appointment has been confirmed at Washington and she is working with zeal to perfect organization of her chapter. Our state chairman sent every chapter a most artistic and instructive year book of historical programs. The subject of the year is, "The Enduring Spirit of '76." Study and research were necessary for the preparation of these programs, which are most interesting. Many of the chapters have used them in their own chapter year books and copies have been sent to other states. Your state regent appreciates the many year books sent to her by chapters. They manifest a deep and abiding love of country, the highest spirit of patriotism.

Official Visits.

Your state regent represented the D. A. R. at the state federation meeting in Augusta as the guest of the regent of the Augusta chapter. During Continental congress last April your regent attended a reception given by a U. D. C. chapter in Washington and found at the head of the receiving line a Georgia woman, Mrs. Bryan, who was formerly Miss Belle Jennings of Thomaston. The D. A. R. delegation received many nice social attentions from senators and representatives in congress. In May your regent was an honor guest at a brilliant reception given by the Savannah chapter and made a patriotic address to all the chapters. In June was the guest of the Dawson chapters and delivered an address at a meeting of the Dorothy Walton chapter, also made a brief talk at a reception given by the Stone Castle chapter and the woman's auxiliary of the American Legion. During a visit to Oregon in the summer met a number of D. A. R.'s from different states.

In October represented our organization in address of greeting at the state convention U. D. C. in Statesboro. In Atlanta represented you at Armistice day exercises of the U. D. C. at the state capitol. Attended a regular meeting of the Joseph Habersham chapter and made a talk. First visit of the new year was to Dublin for the unveiling of a memorial to the world war dead of Laurens county. Made an address. In January made a talk in Atlanta at hospital 48 for world war soldiers. February 2 attended unveiling ceremonies of a marker on the battlefield of Burke Jail, placed by the Waynesboro chapter, a chapter only two years old. Made an address. In February made a patriotic address before the Sandersville chapter and an address on good citizenship before the Tennille chapter. On February 12, Georgia day, made an address in Savannah and on February 13 presided over a good citizenship meeting there. In March made an address at unveiling of a marker on the grave of a revolutionary soldier buried near Milledgeville. The marker was placed by the Nancy Hart chapter. Also made address at unveiling ceremonies over the grave of revolutionary soldier near Irwinton. The ceremonies were under auspices of the John Ball chapter. These visits have been pleasant and profitable, bringing wonderful inspiration to your regent, as we endeavored to encourage all patriotic work. Your state regent has recently accepted an invitation to attend the annual convention of the U. S. Good Roads association, which will meet in Savannah in June, and to deliver an address on "Continental Highways and Markers." Your regent has also been requested to appoint 200 delegates from our organization to attend this convention, so we hope to be well represented there by D. A. R.'s from all parts of Georgia.

Your state regent has written numerous articles for our official columns in The Atlanta Constitution and other newspapers. We have endeavored to assist the state editor in every possible manner, have urged the chapters to send accounts of their work, that we may broadcast to the world the splendid achievements of Georgia D. A. R. We have succeeded in getting a heading across the entire page and our columns look quite pretentious in the Sunday edition. We appreciate greatly the kindness of The Constitution officials in giving us such valuable space.

Recommendations Made.

1. Whereas, the Georgia tree was planted with appropriate ceremonies in Independence square, Philadelphia, along with the trees of all the thirteen original colonies, we recommend that every Georgia state regent make the care and interest of this tree a part of her work, and that we express appreciation to the Andorra Nurseries, who have promised to replace the tree if anything should happen to it; that we may always have a living representative in Independence square.

2. Whereas, Nancy Hart was a Georgia revolutionary heroine of fame, we recommend that the D. A. R. endeavor to have a highway through our state called the Nancy Hart highway.

In my visits over the state I find our members busily engaged in patriotic home-making, the greatest industry in the world. Let us realize that—

It may be a mansion of splendor and pomp,
Or tiny log cabin where way children romp,
If palace or tenement on topmost story,
No place like the home which is true to Old Glory!

Taking Time to Dream To Romance, to LIVE

Modern woman has said good-by to worrying with the washing. Now she spends her time for better things. She takes time now to dream, to romance a little, to LIVE! She knows that an ounce of culture is worth a pound of drudgery merely to save a few paltry pennies!

She has turned over the family washing problems to her laundry's route man. She has found his services never failing, always dependable, unbelievably low in cost. She knows that the modern sanitary methods protect even her filmiest garments and that "quantity production methods" make it possible for her to give the route man all her washing.

No more worrying with washwomen for the woman who knows. No costly motor trips to take the washing "out." No carrying of bundles to side-street washing places. No tiresome street car rides to get the finished bundle. No . . . she has learned to transact business with the laundry route man right at her own door.

West End Woman's Club Secures Lovely New Park for West End

Through the efforts of Mrs. Chester W. Johnson, president of the West End Woman's club, West End will soon have a new park and playground at the intersection of Cascade and Donnelly avenues. Through the courtesy of F. M. Woodall, superintendent of the Joint Terminals and the L. and N. and A. and W. P. railroads, the matter was taken up with W. H. Courtney, chief engineer of the L. and N., with offices in Louisville, Ky., with the result that this property was obtained for the use of a park and playground. This property contains several hundred feet on both Cascade and Donnelly avenues, running to a point where the two streets intersect, and is covered with lovely shade trees. L. L. Wallace, general manager of city parks, and the park committee, including John A. White, chairman; J. T. Osburn, C. L. Chosewood, W. E. Saunders, and Harry York have been instrumental in bringing this project to a successful culmination.

An attractive "kiddie" program was presented by the child's welfare committee, Mrs. J. S. Nunnally, chairman, Wednesday afternoon at the clubhouse. Those contributing to the entertainment were: Cora Key Hutchins, Thelma Andrews, Barbara Ann Cohen, Louise Paden, Lorraine King, Dorothy Layfield, Margaret Wakefield, Grady Andrews, Jack Gable, Pete Catlin, James Ponder. Mrs. J. H. Legion gave a reading, "A Child's Springtime Story."

Johnson, president, urges a full attendance at this meeting, as the nominating committee, to nominate officers for the coming year, will be elected at that time.

ONE is not properly dressed unless the handbag matches the shoes, so Ruth's advice to you is to go to the Atlanta Luggage Shop at 28 Whitehall street, next to Franklin & Cox Drug Store, and buy an entrancing handbag, for they have women's handbags in all the newest shades and creations, in pin seals, calf, alligator, lizard grains and patent leathers in effective two and three-tone shades—pouch, under-arm, thumb purse, or any sort of purse fashioned. These bags can be purchased at the Atlanta Luggage Shop from $2.95 up to $4.95.

French imported steel cut bags that are more beautiful than one could imagine, the correct thing for opera or evening wear.

I truly think that if you will only go to the luggage shop and see these bags as I did you will not leave before buying one. They are even more exquisite than I can convey to you in writing. The Atlanta Luggage Shop is a branch of one of the largest concerns in the world, so naturally they can and do have an unlimited supply of unique bags for you to select from.

THE Bon Ton Pastry Shoppe on Peachtree St. is making the most delicious pastries for Easter decorations. Cakes and eggs of every description and for the dinner Easter Sunday—cakes made in the form of rabbits and covered with icings of any desired shade. I most especially noticed the unusually large eggs made to order. These eggs are made of cake and butter cream, covered with chocolate and attractively decorated.

Big Bunnies made of cookie dough and Zwieback. I was impressed with the fact that these Rabbit Cakes are not harmful to babies, since they are not too sweet.

If you want to make Easter morn happy for the little ones, pay a visit to the Bon Ton Pastry Shoppe and buy some of these tasty eggs and Rabbit Cakes. Then, too, your Easter dinner will be made all the more appetizing if for dessert you have pastries from the Bon Ton Pastry Shoppe.

The vogue of tweeds and the Bayadere striped sweater inspires cotton suiting patterning.

THE lily in all its purity is an emblem of Easter and no home is complete unless adorned by the dainty whiteness of the Easter lily on this day. Rich's Flower Shop is offering these lovely flowers for the very moderate price of fifty cents a bloom. They can be arranged in baskets, or, if you prefer, the growing plant in pots with any number of blooms you may desire.

Then, too, they have cut flowers of every variety and boxes of assorted flowers.

The shoulder corsage that is so new will be another special offering of Rich's Flower Shop for Easter. These beautiful corsages will be made by expert hands and of selected flowers and will be sold for the attractive price of $1.98.

Special deliveries will be made all through Easter Sunday so that the flowers will be fresh and beautiful.

If you are shopping go by Rich's and you will be appalled by the loveliness of their Easter display.

BEAUTY is a woman's natural heritage, but one must take care not only to keep but to enhance the loveliness that is given them. At Rich's beauty parlor you will find experts in the art of beauty culture. Whether you have beautiful skin, luxurious hair or well shaped nails you must realize that the proper care must be taken of them. Miss Bain, the manager of Rich's beauty shop, told me of a facial that is given in her shop in which they use a new and delightful face pack. Komplex it is called. Komplex is used in the place of a clay pack. It is not harsh but the daintiest of all skin rejuvinators. This facial is given by efficient operators and produces wonderful results. Komplex is sold at Rich's beauty shop for $1.00 per box.

Another new aid to beauty is Par-no-co. For touching up the hair there is nothing better. It is in a liquid form and made from pure vegetable compound. It absolutely does not harm the hair but leaves it soft and fluffy and in its natural condition, another good feature of Par-no-co is the fact that it does not color the scalp when applied by efficient operators.

The Frederics Permanent waves that are given at Rich's beauty shop are especially good because of the fact that the operators understand the science of giving the correct wave for each individual head of hair. The feature of the new Fredericks Veto Tonic Compound wave is the fact that the wave is given in half the time that it usually takes to give a wave. The actual baking is eleven minutes. One could not help but be pleased with this permanent because of the fact that it is so very beautiful and doesn't have to be continually set and cared for and lays in natural curls all over the head. I would advise that you make an appointment this week and see for yourself that the things I have told you are true.

SPRINGTIME is full of romance and beauty. All of the entrancing flowers and budding trees seem to make of the world a veritable fairyland.

There are lots of people who have been more or less cooped up during the winter months and the disagreeable days during the windy month of March, and now that Spring is really here, and the days are so glorious that one can hardly resist the desire to get out in the open, and feast their eyes on all the glorious pictures that nature paints, there is nothing more enjoyable than a street car ride or a ride on one of Atlanta's double-deck coaches, through the bowers of dogwood trees and flowers of every description.

Never before have I experienced a springtime when the dogwood was so abundant or the trees were so thick with foliage. It seems that "Mother Nature" has tried herself and has turned all the world into a garden of beauty.

The ride on the Druid Hills car is exceedingly inviting because you will pass through one of Atlanta's most beautiful residential sections.

The dogwood all along the car line is so picturesque and as the car winds around through the trees and green lawns and the refreshing cool breezes blow across your face one could not help but enjoy such an outing.

Take the River car. This is another inviting ride. The car twines back and forth through the woods and at the end of the line there are the waters of the Chattahoochee, winding their lazy course to the gulf.

The Marietta Car will take you on another pleasant ride, and when you stop to think of the pleasure there is in taking a car ride, or you can take a lunch and go to some wooded dell away from the noise and turmoil of the city and spend the day, resting, fishing in the Chattahoochee or having a picnic. It does one good to get out in the open and feel a little closer to the wonders of nature. There is really no need to bemoan the fact that you haven't an automobile when you can take a car ride such as the ones I've tried to describe to you, and enjoy it without the worry of driving.

Scouts doing second-class work laid and lighted fires; gave first aid treatment; did some nature study indentification then, dividing into groups, sent and received signalled messages. After dinner the girls entertained the old soldiers with scout stunts, sang a number of lovely songs and heard war stories from the old veterans. Nature games were played along the way home. The friendship circle was held in front of the cyclorama, where the scouts were dismissed.

Troop No. 20, which is the R. L. Hope school group, has a real opportunity to enjoy outdoor life; become good hikers, to find birds to be studied, trees and flowers to be identified, to build fires in the open, as their scout hut is built on the school grounds among the trees. This group of girls have grown up together in scouting in the same troop with Mrs. C. V. Logan as their leader. They are preparing to be presented at the first-class court. The troop meets on Thursday afternoons at 3:30 o'clock, the girls coming from six different Junior and Senior high schools. They ride to the end of the Buckhead car line, then walk about a mile to the hut. At the troop meeting on Thursday Mrs. W. F. Talley was a guest. Camp Fire Girls Report Activities Of Many Groups

A letter from Miss Mary Louise Hollands, executive secretary of Atlanta Camp Fire, who is attending the national Camp Fire conference for executives in New York city, contains greetings for all Camp Fire girls and guardians in the Atlanta district. At the meeting of the girl's council and guardians' meeting, special greetings were sent to Miss Hollands from Atlanta.

Thursday afternoon a new Camp Fire group was organized in East Atlanta with Miss Christine George as guardian. The charter members of the group are Misses Mettie McDavid, Frances Floyd, Ila Mae Carter, Louise Barrett, Pauline and Louise Ogletree and Henrietta Burton.

The faculty of North Avenue Presbyterian school, the mothers and boarders of the school were invited to the N. A. P. S. Camp Fire girls to attending the planting of a crepe myrtle tree on the school yard Thursday afternoon.

Okeewapo devoted their last meeting to aiding new girls in the group in understanding the Camp Fire program. Each girl explained her Indian name and symbol. Lois Smith, the council representative, made a report of the girls' council.

Glennwoda's meeting Wednesday took the form of a hike. Every member of the group was present and three visitors attended. They learned how to make three kinds of fires and cooked lunch over them. Scrap books are being made by Glenwoda to be taken to Scottish Rite hospital.

Dejohi, of Decatur Junior High, was given a wiener roast Tuesday by Mrs. Lozier, Mrs. Busch and Mrs. Ridley, Camp Fire mothers, in the absence of the guardian of the group; Miss Helen Haggard, who spent the week at her home in Birmingham, Alabama.

At the meeting of the Winnona Camp Fire group, held at the home of Mrs. Grout, the assistant guardian, each girl made 10 smoke prints of leaves. Each girl had paper and a candle and Alice Frierson taught them how to proceed.

Chenalo Camp Fire girls, of Moreland avenue school, hiked to Grant park and on the way, stopped at the Coca-Cola plant and were shown through by E. C. Wing and given sample bottles as souvenirs.

Registration for camp at Toccoa Falls are being received daily at Camp Fire headquarters. Girls are asked to register as soon as possible to assure reservations. One dollar per week covers registration.

Worth-While Club Meets.

The Worth-While club was entertained at the home of the president, 598 Arthur street, S. W., Thursday afternoon, Mrs. A. G. Helmer presiding. The club is composed of a group of women who assemble twice monthly to study the constitution of the United States and the states according to their national number.

"The Louisiana Purchase" and "The Reorganization of the Judiciary with John Marshall as the Great Chief Justice" were the subjects of papers.

"The Treaty With France in 1803" was read, led by the president saying that Levingston and Monroe went to France to negotiate the purchase of New Orleans. They concluded with Napoleon the purchase of the whole Louisiana territory for $15,000,000. Its wonderful addition to the United States, both with territory and wealth, was told of in an interesting article by Mrs. C. A. Wallace.

The sketch of the life of John Marshall was read by the members of the club in turn, Mrs. Eleanor Graham leading, saying that the influence of the great chief justice lives on; and even today the decisions of John Marshall form the basis of American constitutional government.

The place where the treaty was signed was described by Mrs. S. F. Reade, several members of the club having visited the place.

Mrs. W. M. Rapp gave her paper on the early hymn writers, "Fanny Crosby" being her subject. She wrote over 6,000 songs and hymns, and was blind. The subject next will be the "State of Louisiana and James Madison, Third President."

Miss Waldman in Easter Recital.

On Easter Sunday evening, April 17, at 6:30 o'clock, the J. O. Y. Union of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church will sponsor a special musical program, presenting Miss Dorthy J. Waldman, who has the distinction of being Atlanta's youngest concert pianiste.

Miss Waldman is an Atlanta girl, and since finishing at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, has given hundreds of concerts throughout the southern and eastern states. Miss Waldman will be remembered as playing at the Atlanta Woman's club this winter and as arranging the beautiful Frank L. Stanton program for the memorial held for him at the Atlanta Woman's club, when all Atlanta mourned his passing.

Miss Waldman's selections Sunday evening will include two numbers by Liszt, followed by a Chopin etude, from opus 10, the cantilena standing out as the principal theme and Chopin's device of employing the etude-figure as a commentary on the musico-thematic content for the resultant coloration.

Miss Waldman will be assisted by C. D. Kimbro, who will give a baritone solo, and Miss Regina Ungar, a violinist of ability.

Miss Guthman To Be Presented in Recital.

Invitations have been received for the pianoforte recital Thursday evening, April 14, at the home of Miss Dorothy Waldman, 739 Park drive, N. E., when she will present her pupil, Irma Guthman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Guthman, of North Decatur road.

The program will be given from memory and includes works of classical and modern composers, beginning with the famous Kreutzer Sonata, by Beethoven, and the Gavotte in G Minor, by Bach. Haydn's "Gypsy Rondo" will be played next, and one of the interesting features of the program will be that Miss Guthman will wear the costume representing the subject.

A suite from the opera Rigoletto, by Verdi, will be followed by Schubert's Hedge-Rose, en costume; Schumann's "Echoes From the Theater;" Mendelssohn's Venetian Gondola Song, opus 19, No. 6; two numbers by Chopin and Serenata by Moskowski. Miss Evelyn Guthman, also a pupil of Miss Waldman, will play a duet with her. The program will conclude with La Vallee's Papillion.

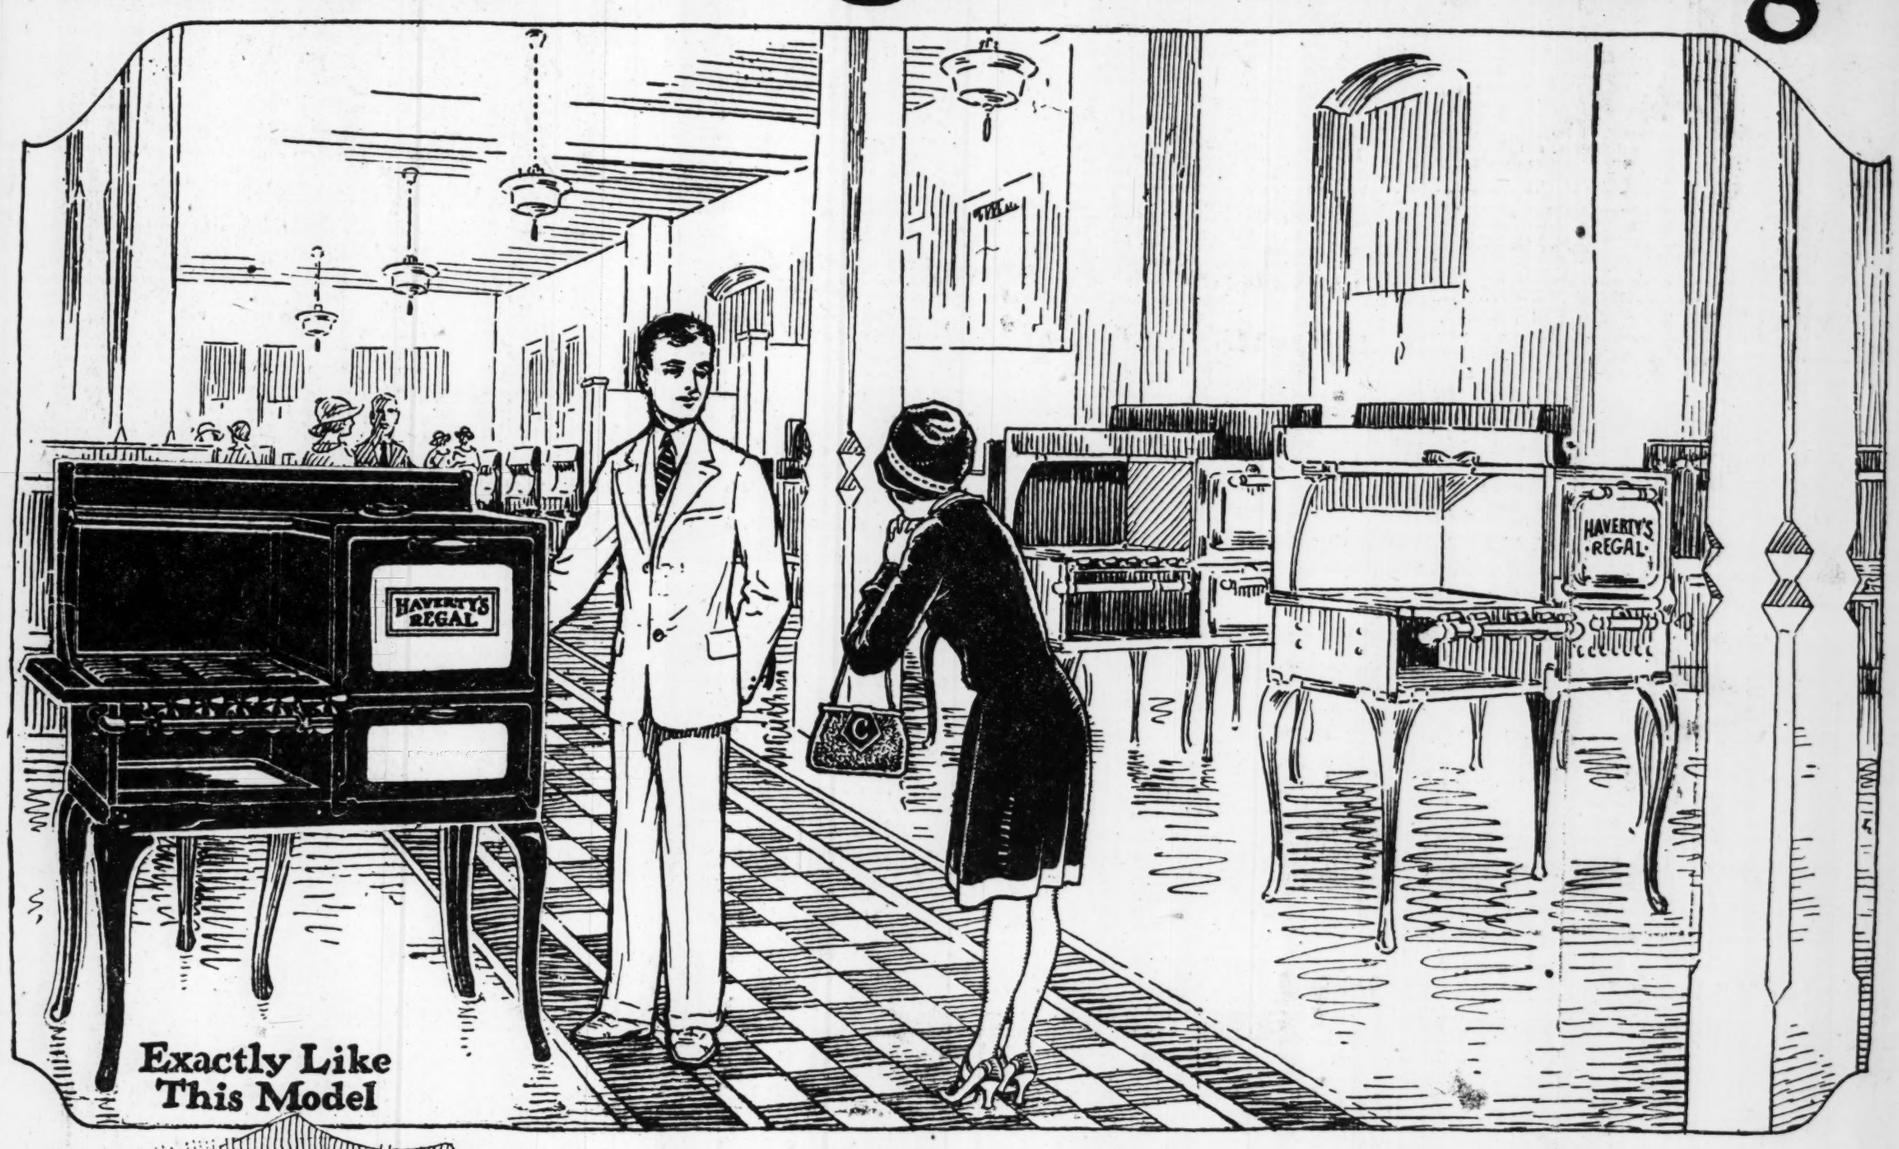

Shakespeare Class Meets With Mrs. Blackburn.

The Shakespeare class will be entertained at a "spend-the-day" with Mrs. Robert Blackburn at "Pine-burr" Wednesday, April 13. Examination on "The Merchant of Venice" will be the feature of the social meeting.

BLUE RIBBON FICTION

by MARION POSCHMAN VALENSI

Reared Behind a Barrier of Pride, "the Little Princess of Northfield, Ohio," Was Almost Cheated of Romance

And so, somenow, they found themselves outside—the black water lapping the landing steps in soft splashes.

ONLY last year in Northfield whenever there was a guest of honor or an important newcomer at the bridge tables or the tea tables of the Franklin County Country club, some one would be sure to point out the Victorian turrets of the old Sloan mansion just visible over the top of Gordon's hill.

"That," the visitor would be told, "is where Julia Sloan lived. The Countess Danziette now, you know! Yes, a Northfield girl. O, quite the most romantic affair! Of course, my dear, we were all children together—we all knew Julia Sloan!"

Only the last statement wasn't quite true. For no one in Northfield ever really knew Julia Sloan—except, perhaps, Alec Farraday. And that is ahead of the story. But at all odds it wasn't Julia Sloan's fault that she hadn't known the Lucy Smiths and Mary Markles of Northfield. And that isn't ahead of the story.

From childhood Julia Sloan had had her role thrust upon her. She was the proud little princess of Northfield, Ohio, on account of the Sloan Hinge Factory fortune. Yes, even as a youngster its shadow and the shadow of the great turreted mansion on the hill had darkened her play days. She would have loved to mother dolls and make mud pies with the little girls on Center street; but, of course, it wasn't the thing for Julia Sloan to do. Although often passing along with her stiffly starched nurse, she had thrust timid smiles between the palings of white fences at little girls who were probably so overwhelmed that they stared open-mouthed, or bashfully turned their small backs. And then Julia, flushing faintly, lifting her little head a trifle higher, passed on. And home again, in her nursery, head still high, she gazed with a bold pretense of satisfaction on a French doll. That early, you see, a kind of pride became her refuge. But even as she grew older, went off to her aunt in Baltimore—to New York and Europe, came back to Northfield and drove along Center street in her motor car, the head lamps burning yellow disks like gold coins into the enchanting dark, she still heard, with a faint wistfulness, the call of the three shaded white houses. The call now changed from dolls and mud pies to the music of mandolins, girls' laughter, and boys' singing voices!

About that time she began to think of her position, and of the strange pride which had grown out of it as wall—a grim, gray wall—that shut her off from the very lovely, simple things which she really wanted. But a wall, nevertheless, which she couldn't quite break through.

Then the summer Julia was nineteen, the summer her father was so sick, she accidentally met Alec Farraday. Alec's father was a carpenter, but Alec was working his way through the state university. Good looking, too—Alec Farraday. Tall as a Viking, fair-haired and blue-eyed and gentle-voiced. They met out on Summit road when Julia's motor stalled. Alec got it started again and rode back to town with her. A few days later he went up to the Sloan courts for some tennis. And after that he went back pretty often. August evenings. Sweet, cool August evenings with the perfume of midsummer heavy in the still air. They used to sit on the side veranda, overlooking the lawn with the fountain where a pale little marble boy was forever wading. Small wonder that those evenings of midsummer sweetness and youth called to Julia Sloan. Cool, sweet evenings after terrible days of fading hope—days spent in the great walnut-furnished room where her father lay ill—days when doctors' and nurses' voices were gravely lowered and the inevitable end shadowed everything.

But even then, in spite of the anguish in her heart, there was a lightness, a happiness there, beyond her control. She knew that something very wonderful and true and beyond money price was almost within her grasp, if she could let herself reach over the wall to take it! And then the night before Alec went back to school there was a moment—a still, white, moonlit moment—their hands lightly touching, the sweet midsummer magic of youth and love casting its age-old spell, when Julia was ready, quite ready to tell Alec Farraday that nothing mattered—nothing in the world but their caring for each other! But at that moment Alec Farraday lifted his fine young face with a little jerk upwards, as if to see more clearly the outline of the black turrets of the big house against the slow flight of the moon. And his hands loosened their hold on Julia's. After all, you must remember, she was the little princess of Northfield.

And so Julia's lips, parting softly, closed again. She found herself saying, "It has been so nice to hear all about your school, Alec; and when you come home for the holidays you must tell me more!"

And Alec after a quick tightening of his own lips, said, in a voice lifted to an odd husky cheerfulness, "It has been awfully nice, Miss Sloan. And when I come back——" He stopped and smiled faintly. "It seems a long way off, doesn't it? But we will see each other, won't we?" A terrible aching fear seemed to lift those last two words to notes of pain, echoing in the still summer air. And then, in a second, he had gone. And Julia was standing in the moonlight as white and curiously still as the pale little wading boy in the fountain—until she slipped down on the top step and wept softly to herself.

In October her father died. And two months later she went to Europe with her aunt from Baltimore. In the spring, in Rome, she met Count Danzietti. And because he was quite practiced in that sort of thing, he made love enchantingly. To Julia it was as unreal and marvelous and glittering as the grand ball must have been to Cinderella. But there ran through all the glamour and ecstasy of everything, like a fine white thread in a pattern of magnificent gold brocade, a strangely persistent, strangely poignant memory of Alec Farraday. But at that—at that memory—Julia tried to laugh. Standing before the great gilt mirror in the medieval grandeur of a room in the Palazzo of Luigi's aunt—that magnificent old Palazzo on the Via Tournamelli—touching with half fearful fingers the jewels of the Danzietti's, one had to laugh at such things! Twenty knows so well those things which are laughable!

And so Julia became the Countess Danzietti and went off to the silence and shadow and dazzling sunlight of the villa high in the hills above Florence—swinging down to Rome for gayety; down to that tragic old Palazzo on the Via Tournamelli. But even in spite of the gayety, there was the lonely wheeling of the evening swallows; the popular and ilex shadows, black and forbidding against the yellow glaze of sunset or gray green dusk. It was in Rome that Julia's nights began to be tortured with dreams of plain white houses on wide, tree-shaded streets.

War was declared that year, and war is bitter. But for Julia it was no more bitter than the years after it—years of disillusionment and heartbreak, and sometimes an almost terrible longing for death. And those years might have marched on forever, if a certain little dancer from Vienna hadn't, and in a measure justifiably, made a very tragic and ignominious end to the gay and reckless life of Luigi Carlo, Count Danzietti.

But when the Countess Danzietti ran into Alec Farraday at the Royal Danieli in Venice last year, all that had passed. The war. The Palazzo on the Via Tournamelli. The villa high in the thickly foliaged hills above Florence. The tragedy. A part of the bitterness. And, not incredibly, the last of the Sloan Hinge Factory fortune; which was quite the end—the end of everything. And of all her host of gay and titled ambitious friends, there was left to her only the solitary friend of her childhood—pride. She never intended to let the world know her shame, nor her loneliness, nor her poverty. And most certainly with her last breath she would have struggled to keep Alec Farraday from knowing.

It was really trying to hide her poverty, that brought her to Venice at the height of the tourist season. Heaven knows, she didn' want to be there! For the two somber rooms which she occupied in the Pension Camarini in Florence had become a sort of grateful retreat from everything. But into the fastness of that retreat had come the devastating telegram from her cousins in Baltimore. Again all America seemed to be swarming at the shores of Europe; and so her cousins were bearing down upon her from Paris. And she couldn't summon bravery enough to tell them the truth. Surely there was some way to escape, for a while longer, the ignominy of showing them the shabbiness of the Pension Camarini, the shabbiness of her clothes, of her life! To escape showing them a British war profiteer in the old Danzietti Villa! To escape dragging her pitiful little pride in the carriage dust of old Florence! So she contrived this meeting for a day in Venice. The telegram had been an expensive one. That was funny—a telegram expensive for Julia Sloan! She explained that business called her north, but that she would manage to be in Venice on that day that, according to their itinerary, they would undoubtedly be there—and delighted to see them at the Royal Danieli.

Then, after she had sent her message, she got an old pearl bracelet from a lacquer box in the carved chest, pulled her last season's black hat down over the smoldering fire in her dark eyes, and went off to a little shop on the other side of the bridge—where she exchanged the bracelet for lire—and the salvation of her pride. All the way, walking in the hot sun to save carriage hire, with the foolish economy of all people who have never known economy, her heart was filled with black, desperate thoughts. But as she reached the doorway of the Pension Camarini all thoughts were swept away in the sudden recollection that she had only two half presentable gowns; the black chiffon and the white crepe with silver. And to make them look as if they had come fresh from Lucille Duval's she would need help.

She began to search her memory for the address of the little French seamstress.

And so Julia went to Venice—and ran into Alec Farraday instead of meeting her cousins from Baltimore. It was while she was dressing for dinner that her cousins' message of regret was brought to her.

"Mama very ill. Leaving for home at once. So sorry."

Julia's first reaction was immense relief—that the expense of the dinner for three would be saved. Then she glanced into the mirror—such a beautiful, flattering old Venetian mirror! She was surprised by the dusky sheen of her hair, the wide tragic beauty of her dark eyes—the cleverness of little mademoisIle in using the silver rose. How well the old earrings and necklace matched. After all, it was very nice to feel pretty again after rigid, scrimping plainness. She caught up the fan with the carved ivory handle—the fan which would undoubtedly be next to go. No, she couldn't hope to keep it much longer—a useless silly thing, when she needed a new winter cloak. Nevertheless, she moved it languidly. She shrugged, too. It was a gesture of challenge of adventure. The bracelet was gone forever. She might just as well go down to dinner!

And then at the very entrance to the dining room she lifted her eyes to meet the amazed, the frankly delighted, clear blue eyes of Alec Farraday.

For a second it seemed to Julia that she was slowly sinking into a black sea perfumed with the concentrated sweetness of all the August nights of her life. And then she was jerked back to the color and the splendor and heavy reality of the Royal Danieli. She held out her hand to Alec Farraday. And in that fraction of a second while they stood, she seemed to see beyond all the outward things—the poise, the vitality, all the unmistakable signs of prosperity in Alec Farraday—something deeper. He had never forgotten Julia Sloan. Tears caught in her throat.

"I can't believe it!" he was saying. "Imagine meeting you like this—Countess——" Then he smiled. "You see, I'm not exactly used to it."

"Please——" Julia was saying, "please, Alec, I'm just Julia." Then she caught her breath—for, of course, she had never called him Alec back in Northfield. She justified herself with a little laughing sentence. "Don't you know any one from home is a long lost relative?"

Alec Farraday flushed as if he understood. There was another second of silence; then he said, "Are you alone, Countess? You see, I'm hopelessly Ohio! What I'm trying to say very properly is—if you aren't dining with any one, can't we——"

"I am alone—quite alone, Alec," Julia broke in evenly. "And I'd love to have dinner with you!"

"I'd never have hoped for such luck—Julia." He smiled shyly. "And I don't suppose I'd ever have had the courage to present myself properly to you in Florence. I knew your address, of course. Northfield saw to that. But a real countess——"

Julia felt a sweet, sudden warmth touch the cold, sharp pain in her heart, as they crossed to the corner table close by a window, looking out over the silver and blue water.

"You're not traveling alone?" asked Julia.

"Alone," said Alec Farraday.

Then Julia laughed. It felt somehow wrong and strange for her lips to be curving to sudden, free laughter.

"Funny, how we're asking each other that!" she said. "I suppose I'm trying to discover whether you have married?"

Smiling, Alec Farraday shook his head. "It's such a serious business these days, Julia! My sister, Clara, has just been married, though—to Joe Baker, perhaps you remember him? Old Doc Baker's son. They've built out on Summit road. You wouldn't know it. There were always some pretty places out there—but now it's fairly gorgeous. They've built the new Country club on the hill."

Through the shimmer of color, the smoke-filled, perfume-laden atmosphere there came to Julia a sweet, clean breath of the autumn woods along Summit road. She saw again the deep lawned, wide white houses.

"I wish you'd go on," she said, "I love to hear from—home."

"But you never come back," he challenged quietly.

Julia shrugged. "No, I never go back." She lifted her hands with a little gesture of futility. "Why should I?"

"We were all very sorry," said Alec quietly, "when we heard of your husband's death. It was—the war?"

And Julia, dropping the white lids of her eyes to hide the lie, said slowly, "Yes—the war." But looking up, tears glistened on her lashes. Then she lifted her hand in a gesture of dismissal. "Let's talk about Northfield," she begged.

And so, while Julia Sloan and Alec Farraday talked and smiled and listened to the music of Venice rise softly from blue and silver water, the table between them became a thing of magic. It made a mockery of the years that had passed—and the fragrance of its flowers was the fragrance of August nights long ago. A dozen years were as the passing of a summer night. She felt the quick beating of her heart—her heart, which was at once warmed with sweet memories and chilled with haunting fear. Fear that he might discover how very poor she was—how very lonely, and wretched, and to be pitied. The one thing which Julia Sloan could not bear—pity!

As they lingered over coffee, Alec Farraday leaned across the table and said abruptly, "Julia—I'm just a plain American tourist. I want mightily to float around in one of those gondolas under the moonlight. Would it be a very silly thing to ask you to do? I mean—would it bore you to death?"

"Alec," said Julia, "I'd love it. We'll go down the Guidecca—past the Zattere." She scorned the fluttering of her heart. And tomorrow was a million hours away! Tomorrow she would be gone. On the first, the earliest train! She gathered her cloak about her shoulders and they made their way out to the landing steps, embarking into the luminous blue dark of the City of Enchantment. The lights along the Guidecca were strung jewels and the quays of the Zattere a thread of dull silver. Music mingled with the soft lapping of water about them.

It was when they were almost back to the Piazza, while they were winding about in the dark mystery of the little bridged waterways, that Alec told her how he had been half afraid to come to Venice for fear it would shatter his romantic ideal. He laughed a bit sheepishly at the admission and suddenly look up, meeting Julia's eyes, he stopped short.

"You needn't be ashamed of it, Alec," said Julia softly. "Italy enchants all of us with its loveliness—at times!"

"Loveliness—Good Lord!" cried Alec Farraday. "It—it's more than that. It's the spirit of romance."

"Romance—isn't everything," said Julia slowly.

"But you love it, don't you?" he went on. "You wouldn't go back, would you?"

"No," said Julia, "no—of course not. I couldn't go back." A little caught laugh, half a sob, echoed in her throat. There was a sudden turn—a sweep between great walls, a darkening. Julia pointed upward. "Not all romance here, either, Alec. The Bridge of Sighs."

And then in a breath almost they were out into the lagoon, moving toward the lighted landing of the Piazetta.

On Thursday evening that was.

And on Saturday morning Julia carried her fan with the carved ivory handle to a little shop behind the Arcades. This, to stay in Venice a few days longer—to spin out the enchantment of a few more ever to be remembered hours. She wanted to carry back to the dark little Pension Camarini a store of loveliness to last through the years. You may smile if you wish. Julia herself smiled at the silliness, the foolishness in a woman past thirty—a woman, as she told herself, forever done with the sweet things of life. But for a few more hours! O—she didn't try to deceive herself. She faced the truth boldly. There were some things as certain as death—and one of them was the inevitable going back to the Pension Camarini—the safe retreat. For supposing anything—even that the hours were as precious to him as they were to her—what was there to be said? The wall between them was higher and stronger than ever. The wall of her pride. She was the Countess Danzietti. Daily he marveled that she could spare the time from her friends and people to devote to him. And with a pitiful bravery she led him to believe that there were friends and gayety. Less terrible that aching little hold on her pride than to have him sorry for her. Sorry for Julia Sloan! Sorry for the Countess Danzietti!

And then on Saturday evening across the silver lit table of their first dinner together, looking into Alec Farraday's eyes, listening to his laughter, to the way he spoke her name, she was suddenly, unreasonably on the verge of tears. Of course it was silly; but she could think only of her desire to rush off—to leave it all to get back to the safe retreat. All at once the poverty, the makeshift, the pretense of a lifetime seemed less painful, less likely to tear her heart into shreds than the pitiful spinning out of these few last hours of borrowed happiness. Her throat ached with the lonely sweetness of the soft music drifting up through the purple dark.

Nights, blue black nights, sitting at her window overlooking the Arno, she knew she would hear the echo of these songs. Now it was as if the whole perfumed, heavy music-laden air was charged with a strange semi-barbaric passion of longing and frustration. And somehow she went on making a pretense of eating, of enjoying food, of being gay. She even offered a patter of small talk about trivial things until, glancing up, she was stopped by the look in Alec Farraday's eyes.

He put down his coffee slowly. "You know," he said, "I hate to think of it, but I ought to be getting back to Paris."

"Then," said Julia steadily, "I won't feel so badly about having to tell you that I'm off tomorrow. I've promised some friends in Florence." There was a second of silence in which she could hear the pounding of her heart.

"And so," said Alec Farraday, "this will be our last evening together. I expect to sail on the eighth," he finished evenly. But the match, lit for his cigarette, burned to the tips of his fingers.

"Naturally I hate to go," said Julia. "For they have been nice, these days, haven't they?"

"Nice! For God's sake, Julia, don't use that word!" he jerked out. And then as if to catch himself he made a rasping pretence of laughter. "I'm wretched enough. And Venice surely deserves something better!" He passed a hand over his eyes with the despairing gesture of trying to brush away pain. Then, sharply, he bent towards her. "You'll think I'm no end of a fool, but I can't stand this place a minute longer. Let's get out.

There was little variation in the auction; at almost every table South bid one Diamond, West one Spade, North passed, and East—bidding two Hearts—obtained the contract. The only variation to be expected from conventional players would be that South might open by bidding one No Trump instead of one Diamond. There are some who consider two Aces and a King sufficient strength for a Dealer's No Trump, and for super-experts with an evenly divided hand—which is the ideal No Trump distribution—there may be an argument in its favor; but when a hand contains a five-card suit headed by the Ace, that suit is the more desirable initial declaration.

With the bidding as above given, at every table South led the Ace of Diamonds, and when North played the Nine, followed with another Diamond. North signalled because, having but two Diamonds, he was anxious to ruff the third round of Diamonds and therefore wished South to continue the suit. Of course North knew that the second round of Diamonds would be won by the adversaries; but after seeing the Queen of Diamonds and the Queen of Clubs, and the Ace and Queen of Spades in Dummy and Ace of Clubs in his own hand, he knew that South's second quick trick to justify his one Diamond bid must be the Ace of Hearts, and with it he can win the inevitable adverse trump lead, and then lead a Diamond for North to ruff.

At all the tables the Declarer took the second Diamond trick in his own hand and led trumps. South won with the Ace of trumps, gave his partner a ruff in Diamonds and, as North had the Ace of Clubs, North and South succeeded in making four tricks, viz., the three aces and the ruff, and saved game.

I heard one or two Declarers complain about their "hard luck" in not making game with so strong a hand; but I heard no one comment upon the fact that he had thrown away his game-going chance. It really was very simple. When the second Diamond was led, the Declarer could tell that South had either the Ace of Hearts or the Ace of Clubs; without one of those Aces he would not have bid a Diamond. Of course he might have held six Diamonds, and in that case the second Diamond lead would be ruffed and the game could not be made; but if, as was more probable, the North and South Diamonds were divided 5-2, the game could be made if the adversaries were held to their three Aces and not permitted to ruff. This could be accomplished in just one way, and it could do no possible harm to try that way. It was for the Declarer to win the second Diamond trick in Dummy with the Queen, and then lead the Ace of Spades from Dummy, discarding on that Ace, not a small Club, but the good King of Diamonds. The trumps could then be led and the game must be made, as Closed Hand could overruff North and the only tricks that would be lost by the Declarer would be the three adverse Aces.

The play is not difficult, but it is of the type which is frequently overlooked by Declarers who are not of the expert class, and it is the sort of thing that should be searched for by Declarers when they plan their campaign, which they should do as soon as the hand of the Dummy appears on the table. This planning of a campaign is one of the most important duties of the Declarer. As soon as he sees the twenty-six cards with which he is to play, he should count his sure winners, note how far they fall short of his desideratum, be it contract, game or slam; he should then note how it may be possible for him to reach his goal by finessing, ruffing or otherwise. In many hands the Declarer admits during the latter part of the play that he then sees what he ought to have done. In most of these hands if that Declarer had stopped, before playing his first card to plan his campaign, he could have seen what he should have done, and would not have been guilty of the error which kept him from obtaining the maximum that his twenty-six cards could produce.

"LUCKY" is the dazzling musical show in which Dillingham office has launched Mary Eaton as a star. This performance takes place each evening on that same New Amsterdam stage which held up "Sunny" during its almost endless run there. Apparently those floorboards can't be shaken loose. "Lucky" bears a great resemblance to "Sunny" insofar as the bewildering costumes, catchy music and fetching girls are concerned. Also as regards the insufferably stupid plot. But here is where we must halt. For Mary Eaton can in no sense of the word ever be compared to Marillyn Miller.

Just how Miss Eaton rates being a star is something that escapes me. She is somewhat pretty and dances rather well, but is startling in neither respect. As for personality, well, to me she seems quite colorless and blah. I don't see this Miss Eaton as star material.

However, "Lucky" has Paul Whiteman and his orchestra, better than ever; the energetic Ivy Sawyer and Joseph Santley are on hand, and there's Richard "Skeet" Gallagher being very likeable and Walter Catlett not being nearly as funny as he thinks he is. They've detached Ruby Keeler from Texas Guinan's mob and she's one of the brightest spots of "Lucky." More of Miss Keeler and less of Miss Eaton might not be amiss.

"That Little Something" is the song hit and a number to which your correspondent has already done his nineteen-fourteen fox-trot at several night clubs. "Dancing the Devil Away" is a dance number to which you are liable to do just that.

As far as costumes and scenery go, you may attend "Lucky" safe in the knowledge that you're going to see the last word in each.

The night I attended "Lucky" I found there Bolling and Hughes Spalding who were here at the Plaza for a couple of weeks. Also in that audience was young Stephen Lynch, Jr., having with him the pick of Miss Spence's Finishing school. Lawson Kiser was another of your city whom I found on hand and he failed to share my opinions regarding Miss Eaton's shortcomings.

"Judy" is a pleasant and harmless little musical comedy in which the ingratiating Queenie Smith makes her first Broadway appearance since "Tip Toes." She has with her this trip that personable young chap, Frank Beaston, and the two of them together make up for some of the other members of "Judy" who, if you ask me, are pretty bad.

Knowing that audiences will never tire of ill-treated step-children—whether red-headed or not—that's what they've made Miss Smith in this play. Four young chaps in Greenwich Village take her in—in a nice way, of course—to be their housekeeper and general bottle-washer. Bright little souls that you are, you've each of you already guessed that they all four fall madly in love with her. In case you are ever in doubt as to which she'll choose, just run outside the theater and you'll see Charles Purcell's name in lights as large as Miss Smith's and that should tell you something. Featured players are the two who always get married just before eleven o'clock.

After a somewhat searching survey of the chorus girls in this show I now understand why there is such a shortage of cooks in New York at present. It seems that in "Judy" there are any number of good upstairs maids turning out to be very poor chorus girls.

"Savages Under the Skin" is another of those tropical affairs on which I recently wasted an evening. I did see the first-night, however, and to sit directly behind Julia Hoyt somewhat compensates for seeing a bad play. It seemed to me everybody in "Savages Under the Skin" were entirely too busy beating on their tom-toms. The hero was so heroic I could hardly bear it. The savages glistening with their idea of tropical make-up were as satisfactory as mob scene savages ever are. Only Miss Flora Sheffield as the girl held my interest and they didn't bring her on as much as I'd liked. It was a big evening for Louis Calhern; he who was so good as the lover in "Cobra" played the part of that excessively heroic hero I told you about.

Earthquake Area Includes the Japan That Is New, Old, and Beautiful

SECTIONS of Japan which are most ancient, most modern and most beautiful, suffered in the worst earthquake which has shaken the mainland since 1923.

"In the quake area modern Japan is represented by Kobe and Osaka," says a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic society. "They are champion cities. Osaka's million people manufacture what Japan needs. Osaka sends her export products 25 miles by rail to Kobe for shipment. When the shock came a big American liner was at the dock at Kobe.

There are always sleek liners and burly merchant ships in Kobe harbor. Much of the raw silk shipments to America, valued at more than $300,000,000 a year, come out of Kobe. This is modern metropolitan, occidental Japan.

"Third Wonder" of Japan in Quake Area

"Twenty miles north is Kyoto, stronghold of ancient Japan, the residence of the Mikado from the time Charlemange went riding through Barbaric Europe. It was to Kyoto that the body of the Japanese emperer who died recently was taken for burial near the tombs of his ancestors. Kyoto has the grace that accompanies age and aristocracy. Its streets are wide. Temples look down on it from the encircling hills. The emperor and the court have gone to Tokyo but many artist colonies which the emperor planted remain in Kyoto. Fine pottery, silk weaving and painting are the pride of the city. Nothing is old in Kyoto unless it has survived three centuries. In the old capital oriental Japan lingers.

"Newspaper dispatches have not yet reported whether Amanohashidate, 'Bridge of Heaven,' one of the three famous beauty spots in Japan, has survived the earthquake. It is close to the focal center of earth movements. A geologist would describe this 'third wonder' as a natural causeway of rock projecting across an arm of the sea. It is artificial in appearance. That probably recommends it to the Japanese who respect scrupulous, perfect beauty more than the wild, natural variety. Crowning the causeway are files of splendid old pine trees. One may walk the strand out toward the sea under the singing pines with the waves lapping the shore close on either hand.

Why Loss Was Not Greater.

"The other two views are far distant from Amanohashidate. One is of the island-filled bay, from Matsushima near the city of Sendai, 300 miles north of Tokyo; the other the Torii of Miyajima near the city of Hiroshima, which is situated on the Inland Sea 250 miles below Kobe. Torii means gate in Japanese, in this case, the sacred gate which stands picturesquely in the water, three stalwart piers on either side supporting a cross beam tip-tilted at its ends. Only the moon knocks at the portals of Torii. After Mount Fuji the Torii picture enjoys probably the widest popularity in the United States.

"Geography has prevented great loss of life in the recent quake which is said to have equalled in severity the disastrous 1923 quake. Mountains come sharply down to the sea on the west coast of Japan and there is room on the narrow shore only for small fishing villages and a few farms. Some of Japan's finest oranges come from this district.

What Has Happened to Justice?

Mysterious Sheatsley Case Suicide or Murder?—Body of Minister's Wife Found in Furnace

WHEN Addie Sheatsley's small body was found dead in the blazing furnace in the Sheatsley home, justice faced a death riddle without parallel in recent years. Various circumstances indicated that the woman might have committed suicide, but could she have climbed into the furnace herself, and then closed the door after her?

On this question there was disagreement. On another question there was no disagreement. Experts called into the case reported that, regardless of whether Mrs. Sheatsley could have done it herself, the fact was that she was dead when her body went into the furnace. Tests showed no carbon monoxide in her lungs or blood. Live animals were burned in some of the tests. Justice finally had to write the case down as an unfathomable mystery.

* * * *

The Sheatsley mystery is one of those things that "simply do not happen." It is far fetched. If it were put into a book and called fiction, readers would condemn it as incredible.

Yet it did happen.

Some time in the afternoon of November 17, 1924, the body of Mrs. Addie Sheatsley, wife of a Bexley, Ohio, minister, went into the furnace of the Sheatsley home and was there almost consumed by flames. The coroner decided she had committed suicide; that is that she had cremated herself. Others in the case decided otherwise.

These latter investigators asserted it would have been impossible for the woman to squeeze feet first through the small door of the furnace and then close the door behind her. It didn't seem possible—though this was hardly a case where one might measure things by possibilities.

Later in the inquiry, experts reported that the woman was dead when her body went into the furnace.

But if she was dead, who killed her? And if she killed herself who placed her body in the fire?

How are we to explain the inexplicable occurrences in the house that day in November, 1924? Evidently there is no explanation. All we can do is recite the facts as they became known and then, like justice, throw up our hands, baffled.

John R. King, who investigated the furnace mystery.

Two-Story Dwelling

The family had resided in Bexley, a suburb of Columbus, for nine years. Their home was like thousands of other suburban homes throughout the country, a two-story red brick dwelling, trim and neat, with a small attic and porch, sun parlor, up-to-date fixtures and the inevitable evergreen shrubs in the front.

Here dwelt the Rev. G. V. Sheatsley, pastor of the Christ Lutheran church; his wife Addie, and their four children—Milton, 20; Clarence, 16; Elizabeth, 14 and Alice, 9.

It was a typical ministerial family. Sheatsley was about 50, a tall, devout man, proud of his calling. He looked and acted like most any other minister one might meet in a suburban town. His wife, of the same age, was a nervous, over-worked little woman, rather sapped physically and mentally by the cares of her home and church.

Mrs. Sheatsley had been a country girl born in a small town near Canton, Ohio, and her marriage to Sheatsley twenty-four years before had been something of a step upward for her. But in time life came to mean for her an endless round of household duties, augmented by the usual worries of a minister's wife. With four children, a house to run, three meals a day to cook and church affairs to think about—

Well, it was quite a lot to expect of a small woman, not over-strong. Possibly she thought about this, if nobody else did.

The late Mrs. Addie Sheatsley, whose body was found in the furnace of her home.

Now we must skip what happened on the day of the tragedy, since we don't really know what actually did occur, and start at the point at which Sheatsley called up the authorities to inform them that his wife had been burned to death in the furnace. The story of what happened must be told by the various members of the family who were questioned.

Sheatsley, in his report to Coroner Murphy, said that all the family had been together in the house for dinner at noon. Milton had attended class at Capitol university in the morning, returned home for the midday meal, and left again at about 12:15 with the two girls. The father said he left at 1:30 p. m.

A Peculiar Odor.

He first went to the bank to make a deposit, he said, and then went to the Mercy hospital to visit two members of his church who were ill. He returned home at 4:45 p. m.

Even before he entered the house, he said, he noticed a peculiar odor. And when he arrived, the children spoke to him about it, but he hadn't thought much about it. He even went to the store to buy some groceries for supper before he finally went into the cellar to investigate.

What he found there was too horrible for words.

He discovered his wife's body all but consumed by the flames. The coroner noticed that the body had been bent in the middle, the head pointing away from the door. From this position it was evident that Mrs. Sheatsley had entered the furnace feet first. The legs were burned away, and part of the torso. There was but a trace of the left arm. The head was a shrunken black mass.

"I can't explain it," said the husband. "I can't believe she could have done it herself."

He said his wife had been rather nervous of late, and that he had recently postponed a hunting trip because of her ill health. He said that during the morning Mrs. Sheatsley said to him, "I would like to be in the place you preached about Sunday." His text had been, "Man Driven from the Garden of Eden." He said his wife mentioned his closing sentence:

"It is my conviction that heaven will be a paradise restored."

Nevertheless, insisted Sheatsley, he couldn't believe that his wife could have climbed through the door of the furnace, small as she was. And certainly she couldn't have closed the door after her. It was a hot-air furnace, with a door fourteen inches square, located some twenty-four inches above the ground.

The Boy's Story.

It would be a tight fit, even for this woman. The body must have completely filled the bowl of the furnace.

When the father left the house at 1:30 o'clock there remained only Clarence, the 16-year-old son, and his mother.

What was this boy's story?

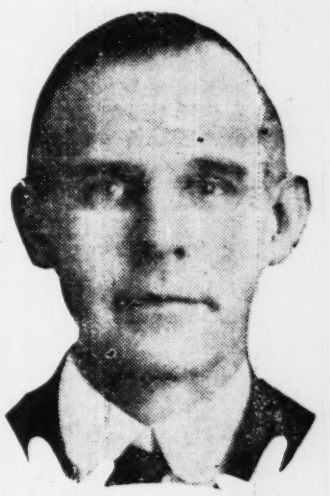

Clarence said he left about fifteen minutes after his father and returned around 3 o'clock. His mother was not there. He said he smelled something burning and went into the cellar and opened the door of the furnace. He saw the body of his mother. She was burning in the fire there before his eyes.

What did he do next?

Clarence said he closed the door of the furnace and went upstairs and took a nap!

The boy did not inform any one of what he had seen. He did not turn off the drafts, which were open. He took a nap and later went out and played football.

Presently Milton came home. He found the girls there. They asked him to go down and investigate. They accompanied him into the cellar.

Rev. Clarence V. Sheatsley, husband of the dead woman.

Milton opened the furnace door a trifle and then hurriedly closed it when a volume of smoke and fumes poured forth. He testified that he thought perhaps a rabbit pelt had been thrown in with the garbage.

Then Milton, too, went out to practice football on the nearby university campus.

Still there was no attempt to check the fire. Even after the father came home the drafts remained open. By the time Sheatsley finally went into the cellar, there was very little left. Another hour or so and the body would have been nothing but ashes.

Coroner Murphy asked young Clarence why he had not told any one what he had seen. Apparently the boy's answers satisfied the official. At any rate, Murphy decided that Mrs. Sheatsley had committed suicide; that she must have climbed into the furnace and so taken her own life.

That was justice's first official act in the Sheatsley mystery.

Not Satisfied.

The day after the tragedy County Prosecutor John King entered the case, and after questioning members of the family, announced that he was not at all satisfied with the coroner's verdict.

He asked Clarence why he had not given the alarm. The boy said he had wanted to wait until his father came home. The father tried to excuse his son's strange behavior by saying that he had always been an emotional lad who kept things to himself!

"How could you do all the things you say you did, knowing that your mother was burning there in the furnace?" asked King.

"She was dead then, anyway," said Clarence. "What good could I do?"

"Why did you close the door after you had seen your mother in the furnace?"

"Well, I didn't like to see my mother burning," the boy replied.

Elizabeth Sheatsley testified that her mother had tossed on her bed in the morning after the clergyman went downstairs. She moaned that she would never be forgiven for her sins. "Your father will never preach a better sermon than he did yesterday," she said.

"But, mamma, you haven't any sins!" cried the girls.

"You don't know—you don't know!" she had said.

Sheatsley said that he knew of absolutely nothing in his wife's past that might lead her to contemplate suicide, or which would offer a motive for murder. He had long been an enthusiastic hunter, he said, and the previous Saturday he had bagged several rabbits, which he brought home. These pelts had been burned in the furnace. The children were used to the smell.

"I cannot believe that my wife climbed into the furnace and committed suicide," he repeated.

Three Reasons.

But in a day or so the minister changed his mind about this and issued a statement explaining his revised conclusion.

"My wife was a nervous sort," he said. "She had never spoken of suicide, but apparently there were many things on her mind she did not tell me. An unusual nervousness was all I noticed about her before I left home.

"I am convinced now that my wife of her own free will crawled into the furnace and burned to death," he stated, and gave three reasons for his belief:

1.—Statements of furnace men that Mrs. Sheatsley could have crawled through the fourteen-inch square aperture leading to the blazing coals.

2.—Pathological changes, due to her age, which he said he believed might have resulted in a sudden mania.

3.—Knowledge gained by eight months in India of the ability of humans, through religious fanaticism, to make their bodies virtually insensible to pain.

Prosecutor King, however, refused to swerve from his conviction that the woman had been murdered and then thrust into the fire.

King, in the course of his inquiry, questioned two visitors to the house during the afternoon. One was E. E. Brideweiser, a student at Capitol university, and the other C. O. Strader, delivery man for a Columbus bakery.

The student knocked at the parsonage at 3 o'clock, the approximate time King believed Mrs. Sheatsley had been placed in the furnace. He received no response, but said he heard some one at the furnace in the cellar.

The delivery man brought a loaf of bread to the back door at 2:15, and, when he received no answer, placed the bread inside the door on the kitchen floor. He said he had not noticed the odor of burning flesh which had permeated the neighborhood between 3 and 3:30 p m.

Fortunately enough of the body remained so that the lungs and blood might be analyzed. H. M. Brundage, pathologist, and Dr. F. C. Long, an analytical chemist, examined the remains. Their findings were illuminating.

Dr. Brundage reported that the lungs were congested, as if from strangulation, and that nowhere could he find a trace of ashes, soot or carbon monoxide. He asserted that these traces would certainly have been in the lungs had the woman entered the furnace alive.

Therefore, by this expert's testimony, Mrs. Sheatsley was dead when her tired little body entered the furnace.

A Maniac at Work?

If this was true, what was the explanation of the mystery? Had a maniac been at work? Such a thing has happened before.

Dr. Long in his report said:

"I am absolutely positive that there was no trace of carbon monoxide in the blood. I obtained three ounces of it and submitted it to five different tests. In all of them it was shown to be positively normal.

"I have preserved these samples. I have the results of these tests and I am willing to submit them to any chemist or to the world. I know they are accurate."

A bottle of poison had been reported missing from the home, but Dr. Long said there was no trace of poison in the body.

When Sheatsley heard the report—he was in Canton at his brother's home—he said that he was glad for any information that might be brought out, but that he still had no reason for changing his opinion that his wife took her own life. "I expect to be here in Canton for several days yet," he said. "Prosecutor King can find me any time he wishes to get in touch with me."

About a week after the tragedy something of a sensation was caused when it was learned that some suspicious evidence had been uncovered in the house.

Bits of tissue, like human flesh, were discovered in several places in the parsonage. A hammer, apparently blood-stained and with a few strands of hair clinging to the blunt end, was unearthed, and a pair of blue trousers and a table cover similarly stained were found—the trousers in the coal bin and the table cover in an attic closet.

Sheatsley, when informed of these discoveries, said the splotches had been caused by rabbit blood.

Prosecutor King said the trousers were those of a boy.

Investigators also noticed stains on the kitchen door about a foot from the floor, and about eighteen inches up was what appeared to be a piece of skin and flesh as large as a thumbnail.

Across from this door on the casing and on the door leading down into the basement were more marks. On the asbestos pipe covering just over the furnace door was still another large dry crimson stain.

On the piping leading in another direction, just to one side of the furnace door, were the unmistakable imprints of three fingers. These stood out plainly against the rust that had gathered on the hot air pipe.

Here, indeed, might be incriminating evidence. But analysis showed that the stains had been caused by rabbit blood.

In Canton young Clarence told further details of the tragedy. He said when he opened the door of the furnace and saw the dark form he "thought it might be mother." Then he went upstairs. He said he didn't want to believe it was his mother, but he was afraid it was.

"After lying on the bed a while I went out, meeting some boys playing football," he continued. "I joined them and played with them. I forgot about the furnace for a while."

He met his father later at home, he said, and the father said: "O, Bud, something terrible has happened! Mother has got into the furnace!"

"I was afraid it was mother," the boy replied.

Sheatsley said he had remained calm through this terrible crisis because he had trained himself not to show his feelings. "I have been taught to hold on to myself, thank the Lord," he said. "It took every bit of my self-control, I can tell you!"

Mother's Death a Blow to Family

If Addie Sheatsley committed suicide by squeezing her body into the furnace in her home, she dealt a terrific blow to her family by the peculiar method of destruction she chose.

The shadow of suspicion fell upon her minister-husband, and upon her young son, Clarence. Justice was never able to dissipate that shadow completely, for proof of suicide was never established.

The Sheatsley family on the way home from the funeral.

And in the meantime justice moved heavily along and finally came to a complete stop. The mystery simply could not be solved. Coroner Murphy stuck to his verdict that it was suicide. The experts insisted that it couldn't have been suicide.

It was definitely established by experiments with guinea pigs that the lungs of a living being burned to death would contain carbon monoxide. Animals were placed in the fire dead and others were placed in alive, and all the tests bore out the findings.

Early in December an anonymous letter came to the parsonage, scrawled in almost illegible handwriting on white paper. The letter, mailed from Buffalo, N. Y., stated that the writer had killed Mrs. Sheatsley and that he would kill the minister.

"No detective will get me," it stated. "I murder them all. You kill my wife and I kill yours."

The police decided that some fanatic had written the letter. It was not taken seriously.

The Sheatsleys still live in Bexley, the father is still pastor of Christ Lutheran church, and the children are still going to school there.

Asks Prison Terms For A

Nebraska's Proposed Law Which Makes the Theft of a Man's Wife or a Woman's Husband as Much a Felony as Stealing an Automobile or Robbing a Bank

OMAHA.

A BILL introduced in the Nebraska legislature some time ago is causing a tremendous to-do in this commonwealth and elsewhere all of a sudden, because somebody has discovered it is reasonably certain sooner or later to become a law.

State Senator John W. Cooper, the author of it, calls it his Anti-Sheiking bill, although the calendar name is the Alienation of Affections bill.

Unless the active Mr. Cooper is headed off, "sheiking" and "vamping" will become felonies in the state of Nebraska, punishable by fines of from $1,000 to $2,500, and prison terms ranging from one year to five.

Flo Leeds, the "vamp" who was revealed in the separation of the now reconciled James A. Stillmans

By "sheik," the senator means any man who tampers with the affections of a married woman and lures her away from her more or less trusting spouse.

A "vamp," for the purpose of the bill, is any woman who breaks up another woman's home by inveigling her husband into one of those triangular affairs that usually end in the divorce court.

In no state in the union is such alienation now a criminal offense, although civil actions for alienation of affections are very common.

"My bill is aimed not at foolish petters, primarily, but at home-wreckers," explains Mr. Cooper. "It is the result of thirty-eight years of observation of men and women as a member of the Nebraska bar.

"Not all sheiks, mark you, wear slickum on their hair, baby burnsides, and bell-bottom pants.

"Not all vampires go in for rouge, lip-stick, Black Bottom dancing and naked knees.

"Many a villianous old sheik is an official in a bank, an elder in a church, active in the chamber of commerce, and outwardly as conventional as a black derby hat. Many a heartless vampire wears sensible shoes, the demurest of clothing, and sings in the village choir.

"My own observation has been that some of the most sinister and insinuating sheiking is done by old boys of eighty, not young lads of twenty; and that hefty widows of the fair-and-forty type break up a lot of homes."

Love piracy will increase, Senator Cooper feels, unless it is made as much a felony as stealing an automobile, or robbing a bank. Recourse to the civil law—the alienation of affections damage suit — is not deterrent enough.

When a lady is lured away from her steam radiator, her rubber plant, her radio and her husband by some wolf in Kippy-Kut Klothes, the husband should be able to lodge a charge against him instead of hiring a lawyer and preparing for protracted litigation.

"Murders have been committed for lack of such laws," says the foe of sheiks and vampires. "Deserted husbands and wives naturally desire vengeance, and that is not to be obtained by a long-drawn-out civil suit. But if the guilty could be punished with a term behind the bars, there wouldn't be so many of these unwritten law shootings.

"Instead of investing in an automatic the wronged husband or wife would swear out a warrant and let the law do the rest.

"When a man steals your lawnmower, you don't have to go to law with him to get him punished. You make a criminal complaint. What about the man who steals your wife?"

Senator Cooper wishes it understood that he has no axe to grind, and is making his crusade quite selfishly. He is not married and never has been. Sheiks never lured a loved one from his embrace, and his information about vampires was gathered from the sidelines. They never tried their hated wiles on him.

Evelyn Farris, the former stage beauty who was unable to cure Raymond Bennett of his sheikish habits—not even by marrying him twice

The initial tendency to treat the bill as a joke has vanished for, as was said at the beginning it has suddenly been remembered that Cooper presented the same bill two years ago, and it passed the senate, 23-10. It would have passed the house, but it reached the clerk's desk just too late.

He has plenty of support among the legislators, and has received letters from all parts of the country commending him for his defense of the American home.

The bill is very specific and defines sheiking as "enticing a person of the opposite sex away from husband or wife, causing such person to desert such husband or wife, and alienating such person's affections."

It says nothing about "second offenders," on the theory that one conviction would discourage the most ardent and enterprising of home-wreckers.

Nor does it refer in any way to that army of sheiks and vampires who pet, flirt, or otherwise carry on with single persons whose affections are their own. One step at a time is the senator's motto, and he wants to clean up the "poachers" first.

"Had there been such a law when General Dan Sickles shot and killed Philip Barton Key, son of the composer of 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' Key probably never would have been killed," Cooper avers.

"Sickles, a Civil War hero, and hot blooded, killed Key for being undul ll "Vamps" and "Sheiks"

intimate with Mrs. Sickles. The general was tried for murder, although he was acquitted under the unwritten law. If he could have invoked a law which would have disgraced the man who injured him and sent him to jail, it is doubtful that he would ever have drawn his gun.

"Consider the case of Jack Cudahy, millionaire ...ker of Kansas City, and Jere Lillis. Cudahy found Lillis at the Cudahy home late one night, ' went after

Edward S. Gallagher, the well-known comedian, yielding to what his former wife charged was the vampish lure of Ann Luther, whom he later married him with a butcher knife. The details of that grim case are pretty well-known. It would not have reached such a climax if my anti-sheiking law had been there for the deceived husband to appeal to."

The morning's mail greatly encourages Cooper to keep up his fight, for of all the letters he has received so far, not one has been unfavorable. Here is a typical one from Judge Frank A. Baldwin, of Bowling Green, Ohio.

"Your bill should appeal to every right-minded citizen. You are on the right track. More power to you. My fifty years in the law has brought to my notice very many instances of unwarranted disturbance of domestic relations. Most of them had their origin in the attempt of a person to alienate marital affections and destroy conjugal relations.

"For the punishment of such practices, no adequate remedy is provided by law. The law does nothing to forestall the breaking up of a home. The action for damages to which the wronged spouse may resort affords neither protection nor satisfaction. In many cases the wrongdoer is financially irresponsible, and if he has property the same villainous propensity will be exercised to escape the consequences of his wrongful act.

"We have abundant laws for the protection of property rights but no practical protection is afforded against assaults upon the family relation. If a penal law was available it would certainly have a salutary effect, not only in the way of punishment for the wrong done but as a deterrent to others."

Senator John W. Cooper, the avowed foe of all love pirates

An eastern congressman writes from the house office building at Washington:

"I cannot too strongly commend your bill. It is something that should have been proposed years ago. I wish ...ry success in securing its passage."

From Nahant, Massachusetts, a woman writes:

"Work to have your bill made national. Here in the east the ranks of the home-wrecking vultures are recruited very largely from the stenographers and self-styled secretaries on the one side, and the very prosperous or ignorant classes on the other."

A Wichita, Kansas, woman responds to the challenge of the holy war on sheiks and vampires by writing in:

"Go to it. Your bill is splendid. I know a woman in Wichita who has already broken up three homes—just for the fun of the chase."

From "one who knows," the senator is in receipt of the following eloquent bit:

"I note you are a bachelor. Been waiting until your home is protected by law? I once had a lovely wife. She was sheiked. Now I have none. God help us all!"

A Boston woman of moderate means says:

"My husband was taken away from me by a wealthy New Hampshire widow, and I can feel for others. Such a law should be in effect in every state. The courts, as it is now, sometimes award an injured wife a little money as a poultice, and the well-dowered vampire continues to enjoy the society of the man she lured from home."

A Kansas woman writes that when she and her husband were poor they were happy. She helped him in the fields and they acquired a farm and independence. Then some countryside vamp learned he was "a live one" with money, and rolled her eyes at him. Now the wife is taking in washings and the wicked love pirate and simple-minded farmer are taking it easy in parts unknown.

After ten years in the western fields, a missionary is convinced the bill would help not only faithful wives and husbands but the children of unions so often broken up by the arrival of "the other woman" or the "other man."

A deserted wife of Oneonta, N. Y., arises to testify she would like to see the bill a national one. Her husband was vamped right out from under her nose, and now she has only her children, a mortgage, and her memories.

While direct, the bill of Senator Cooper is very brief, and apparently some confusion would arise in certain cases. For instance, in case a married man eloped with a married woman, the jury that tried the action might have to depend a lot on its own intuition in finding out who vamped whom. Such things will be clarified in time, though, the author says, and he deplores the habit of picking flaws in a bit of legislation he regards as sorely needed.

"Oh, yes," he admits belligerently, when questioned, "we've got some op-

The Romance of Nikko Cheyne

INSTALLMENT V.

Veronica to the Rescue.

TOO began months when Nikko was continually en cellules for increasing periods. Discipline must be maintained, and he had no one but himself to blame for what was happening, but this did not help him to avoid trouble. The cells with their humiliations and discomfort offered relief against the deadly monotony which every day oppressed him more and more.

A yearning for a break—for something different to happen—was ever present in his mind. He became curious about that other world, the world he used to know and to which for seven years he had become a stranger. He longed for new faces—new voices—another kind of conflict. He wished he had not forbidden Fladgate to write. A letter would have been an event to him who had received no letter of any kind for seven years.

And before him were another three years of service—with the same things happening—the same faces—the same noisy wine-guzzling nights and time table days.

It was when his thoughts looked forward that the cafard, the madness of the Legion, transformed Nikko Cheyne into a different being—a crazy care-not-what breaker of rules and of men's heads.

But none cared. Sooner or later, the cafard took each man in its grip. It was a spectre that rose and waned and rose again. It was inevitable—recurring like the desert marches—the wretched streets of Sidi-bel-Abbes, the eternal astiquage—the cheap Algerian wine—the hired women of the Kasbah—the regimental band—the bugle notes—the cursing of N. C. O.'s—rattling of tins—grunts of sleepers in the barrack room at night and all the mass of details and parades that went to the making of the Foreign Legion.

On an afternoon in the early spring of nineteen twenty-one, Nikko Cheyne, with a group of his comrades, was loafing near the guard room, when a batch of recruits under the charge of a sergeant and two corporals shuffled through the barrack gates.

To Nikko there was something pathetic about the arrival of these scared, ignorant creatures. Dirty, ill-kempt and tousled, with the fear of strange places in their eyes, their faces gray with the grime of travel—their civilian clothes crumpled and tattered—herded like cattle for the slaughter, these men of alien races, refugees from justice, scourings from cities and down-and-outers, presented objects for sympathy rather than targets for abuse.

The sergeant halted and formed them in line, looked them over and, laying his hands on the pit of his stomach, rocked to and fro like a man about to be sick.

"O, filth and children of unwedded parents," he cried. "Is the Legion to be defiled with the bodies of such sacred pigs." Then to one of the corporals, "Take away these lice."

The old ritual. Accompanied by jeers from the trained soldiers the awkward squad was marched off to be scrubbed, uniformed and absorbed into the great machine. They were a miserable company, a poor lot, save for one neat little chap who stood smiling under the barrage of abuse, and who, despite the deplorable condition of his clothes, carried his head high and walked with a swagger. For want of better occupation Nikko followed in the dust of the retreating squad and presently found himself alongside the little man in the lavabo, where, before assuming the uniform of the Legion, a recruit must scrub himself from head to foot.

"What's your name," he asked, "or rather what name do you call yourself?"

The little man smiled through a froth of soap.

"Mekla. It is my own name, monsieur."

"Then you were a fool to come here," said Nikko.

Mekla shrugged his shoulders.

"Maybe, monsieur. But is it not said that the Legion is the refuge of losers?"

He spoke in French but with an odd ungaelic inflection.

"Wash! Do not talk, pig," shouted the N. C. O. in charge.

"He is washing," said Nikko, in that new coldly insolent tone that was the foundation of so many of his troubles.

The N. C. O. scowled.

"I did not speak to you, Travailleur—get out of this."

It would have been open insubordination to disobey.

"I'll wait for you outside," said Nikko. "The first few days are the worst—for there is no latitude for ignorance."

"Did you hear my orders, Travailleur?"

"Monsieur le caporal has the finest voice in the Legion," said Nikko, saluted and went out.

Chance decreed that Mekla was allotted the next bed to Nikko's, a circumstance for which he had good reason to be grateful. Nikko instructed him in the all-important business of folding his uniforms to the correct elbow to finger tip length and arranging his paquetage on the shelf above the beds. Also he gave him information of a value beyond price. A "bleu" is entirely dependent upon what he can pick up from the old soldiers, for without that he would inevitably transgress the iron rules of the Legion and bring down upon his head the vials of wrath.

Mekla was swift to learn and ready with his gratitude.

"I had not looked to find such kindness," said he. "Monsieur is indeed most generaus."

In a barrack room such speeches are rare. What he said was overheard by one, Frojard, a thick-set, turgid-minded Walloon to whom all forms of nicety were abhorrent.

"Father of snakes," he cried, "what daintiness is this that talks with the pretty accents of a——" the rest of the sentence is better left out. Then seizing Mekla by the collar and the seat of his pants, he hoisted him into the air. 'A nosegay for some one! Who wants it?"

Without hesitation Nikko drove his fist home in Frojard's solar plexus. There was a whine of escaping breath, and Frojard collapsed, dropping Mekla heavily to the floor.

The little man swiftly regained his feet, and turned reproachfully to Nikko.

"Monsieur, I beg that you let me fight my own battles," and, leaning forward, he struck Frojard in the mouth with an open hand.

And leaning forward he struck Frojard in the mouth with his open hand.

The big Walloon was so surprised that he made no effort to get up, but sat, gaping goggle-eyed, from Mekla to Nikko, and back again.

"Name of a sow, what does the fool mean by that?" he demanded.

"That I shall be charmed to cross swords with you at any place or time you may be pleased to name."

From the room broke loose a great guffaw.

"Is that so funny?" demanded Mekla. "In my country a challenge is accepted before it is laughed at."

"Gee! Here's a spitfire," said a lanky American, "and durn me if he doesn't mean business."

There had been something very convincing in Mekla's tone.

Nikko Cheyne put a hand on his shoulder.

"We don't fight with swords in the Legion," said he. "For one thing, we have none, and for another it isn't done."

"No," said Frojard, "but it will give me an astounding joy to tear out your tripes."

And he rose, drawing back his sleeves, significantly.

Nikko Cheyne spoke:

"Frojard, there isn't going to be a fight—but if there is, there will be two."

"Out of my way, Travailleur."

"You know me, Frojard."

Mekla pressed forward, eagerly.

"I beseech you to allow me to spit this vermin after the custom of my people—doubtless I could makeshift to do it with a bayonet."

There was another gust of laughter and some shouts of approval. Pluck and spirit rank high in the opinion of the Legion.

The American ranged up beside Nikko.

"Travailleur has said it," he announced. "This fight is off."

Then, turning to Mekla, with a grin that spread from ear to ear, he demanded:

"Say, what little dovecote d'you hail from where they go flashing steel about this way?"

Nikko translated.

"I am from Sciriel," said Mekla.

Nikko Cheyne sat down on the bed, with his eyes wide open.

* * * *

Nikko and Mekla sat together at a cafe table in Sidi-bel-Abbes with a "pinaud," a bottle of wine between them.

"Now," said Nikko, "talk. Tell me about your country—why you are here—everything. In asking this I am defying every principle of the Legion, but, O, Mekla, there are a million questions you may be able to answer. It's something beyond curiosity forces me to ask you."

"But I am willing enough to talk, Monsieur, why not—but what interest——?"

Nikko waved the objection aside.

"It is my personal history?"

"No."

"Then it is news of Sciriel you desire."

Nikko nodded.

"Yes, to know that all is well with it."

Mekla shook his head.

"All is not well or I would not be here."

Nikko moved uneasily.

"You came into the war," he said, "toward the end."

"We fought with the allies. Lost many men—men we could ill afford to lose—for our population is small, Monsieur. As a result, much of our cultivated land reverted to the wild. That started discontent and grumblings. It was this way, Monsieur. While the war lasted we had given protection and accommodation to the retreating armies of one of our greater neighbors. It is not for the host to complain of the manners of his guests, but these guests were too numerous for our household—they sapped its resources, and when supplies ran low and there was a food shortage they seized in bulk much that was needed for the maintenance of our civil population. Nor was this all. They spread seditious talk abroad of a kind that prospers well among persons whose bellies are empty. When the armistice was signed and our troops returned it was to a country frowning with discontent and unrest. There was almost famine. Many of our guests, as I call them by courtesy, did not return to their own places, but stayed in Sciriel, and would not be moved. Presently other and more dangerous strangers drifted in from the near east, men whose mouths were full of talk of a great democracy, of the glories of a commune, of the triumphs of bolshevism. Monsieur, we Sciriens are a simple and loyal race, but even the stoutest loyalty is shaken by hunger and insidious promises. Grumblings against the royal house and its rule, faintly whispered at first, grew louder day by day. At last it was no longer safe for the old king to ride in the streets of Djevo, the capital."

Nikko's hand was pressed tightly over his mouth.

"In the autumn of last year the harvest failed—utterly. Monsieur, who does not know my country, will hardly realize the significance of that calamity. The nation lost its head—its ruler was powerless to control the situation. Our treasury, depleted by the cost of war, was unequal to the demands laid upon it. It is no simple matter for a country that for a generation has been entirely self-supporting to import from other nations the huge supplies that we suddenly needed. Besides, was there not a world shortage? Result, Monsieur, chaos. And out of that chaos came what from time immemorial chaos has always produced—a man—one man—who rightly or wrongly captures the imagination of the people. Monsieur, no one knows whence came Foscani, the Sleek One, the Smiler. One day he was unknown—the next he was everything—and everywhere. Some say he is a Russian, others a Pole; it does not matter which. For my part I call him the creature of the moment. As if by magic he emerged—with a sudden force of five thousand hired mercenaries at his back—and as if by magic the whole country was in his grip."

Mekla stopped to gulp down the contents of his glass.

"Monsieur, has it ever been your lot to see liberty at its work? I pray not. It is not a pretty sight. That liberty may prosper, order, decency, and even life itself must be smashed and trampled down. We Sciriens are not used to dead women lying in the streets of Djevo. Perhaps we went mad because of that."

At the words "dead women" Nikko sat bolt upright, with trembling hands, that shook the glasses on the table.

"I, myself, was present in the square when, by Foscani's orders, the king was hanged over the steps of the palace."

Nikko could stand no more.

"Princess Natalie," he cried, and again, "the Princess Natalie."

Mekla looked at him strangely and shook his head.

"Not even the Smiler would dare to go that length. Our Natalie is too well loved."

The sweat was glistening on Nikko's face. He took his head in his hands.

"Thank God for that!"

"Her father, Prince Carelon, who now should be king, was also spared—spared some hundreds of noble gentlemen for work in the salt pits of Plevi." Suddenly Mekla rose to his feet. "Monsieur, I have been a royalist, devoted to the house of Montressor since infancy. Sciriel under any other rule is no longer my country. Wherefore—I have none—and ——" he brushed his uniform with a swift, comprehensive gesture.

For a long time neither spoke. Then Nikko slowly lifted his head and in his eyes burned a new and brilliant light.

"A republic!" he muttered. "The royal house has fallen?"

Mekla nodded.

"To the ground, Monsieur."

Nikko Cheyne smote the table a great blow with his fist.

"I'm free!" he cried. "Great God! I'm free!"

* * * *

That evening for the first time since he had joined the Legion, Nikko Cheyne's remoteness fell from him like a cloak. He was a man transformed—flung back to boyhood. He went a round of the cafes, standing drinks with a prodigality like of which had never been known before. It was a mad night, a night of singing, of dancing, and of fights. Seeing that this was no ordinary occasion, the civilian population kept discreetly behind locked doors.

Loudest among the singers was Nikko. He was everywhere—in and out of the crowded cafes, spreading the fire of his enthusiasm in twenty different points.

He had started the crazy pilgrimage with Mekla for company, but it was not long before others were recruited, and presently a great band of Legionnaires, roaring old marching songs, surged in his wake, sweeping all before them.

A night of nights! And a wonder it was there was wine enough in the town to moisten those song hoarse, burning throats.

"If this is a cafard of the Travailleur's," they shouted, "by the saints it is of a pleasant kind."

The ingrained habit of obedience brought the revelers back to barracks at the summons of the bugle, but the guard at the gate tactfully avoided employing their usual vigilance as the men staggered through to their quarters. Even the most iron discipline is susceptible to elasticity. A collective spirit, no matter how harmonious its origin, is dangerous to meddle with. The word had been passed that a certain Legionnaire had opened at a certain cafe a deposit account of liquor for the benefit of thirsty N. C. O.'s. Wherefore the sentries on duty, in obedience to high command, kept their eyes discreetly lowered and were able to report, with truth, that they had "seen" nothing wrong.

Afterward this universal celebration came to be known as "the night when Sidi-bel-Abbes sang."

No one thought to ask the reason that inspired the Travailleur's sudden madness of hospitality. A man's motives, being the only things that remain private to him in the Legion, are held sacred. It sufficed that the frugality of their lives had for one evening been gloriously enlivened, and no one complained if in consequence next morning his tongue was starchy and his head throbbed.

Before the gayety was at its height Nikko had scribbled some words on a telegraph form and given it, with money, to an old Arab, who from time to time rendered small services to Legionnaires and was to be trusted.

The message, addressed to James K. Fladgate, was brief and to the point.

"I must see you at once." It was signed "Nikko," and addressed to the Carlton hotel, London. "Please transmit."

The Arab promised to wire it first thing next morning, and Nikko, knowing the promise would be kept, abandoned himself to the madness of the night.

The fact that by the terms of his enlistment there were three more years before he could obtain his discharge did not deject Nikko. The reason which had made him join the Legion no longer existed, therefore he would cut loose.

The Legion has a very effective system for preventing desertion. Not one man in a hundred succeeds in getting clear away. Those who fail in the attempt either fall victim to the Goums—desert Arabs—employed by the French to round and capture deserters dead or alive—or they go to a living death with the penal battalion at Biribi.

Nikko knew well enough what failure to escape would mean, but in his sudden new found joy there was no place for thoughts of failure.

Thus, although they knew it not, a hundred or more of his comrades in the Legion and a great number of N. C. O.'s were drinking success to the escape of Nikko Cheyne.

* * * *

Nikko's conduct while waiting for the reply to his telegram was exemplary. That he contrived to make it so was the worst ordeal through which he had ever passed. Obsessed by thoughts of escape, it was intolerable to submit to the routine of daily duties. Knowing that of late he had become a marked man, upon whom his superiors were ever ready to drop, he guarded his tongue and obeyed orders with an alacrity to which since the war he had been a stranger.

He did not dare to think too much of Bettany and keep his mind solely focused upon the vital business of avoiding trouble. Terror, a sensation hitherto unknown to him, walked at his elbow, that on the day when Fladgate should arrive he would be confined to cells for the commission of some trivial offense.

Only once more he talked to Mekla about Sciriel, and that was to ask if he knew ought of the Baron Vilasto.

Mekla nodded.

"A very old man now, whose brain has turned to softness by the tragedy of the revolution."

"Mad?" Nikko queried.

Mekla shook his head.

"Not mad—say rather a child again. He lives in the house where the princess is a prisoner and is the sole member of her household allowed to move freely about the city."

"He was a great gentleman," said Nikko, with a tightness in his throat.

"Monsieur speaks truly. And now that great gentleman is a child, who blinks and smiles foolishly at the sun."

"Mekla, how is the princess called these days?"

"By the name Montressor, monsieur."

"Montressor," Nikko repeated softly.

A bugle sounded.

Nikko was first to reach the barrack square and fall in beside the market.

Just a week after he had sent his telegram, the room corporal tossed a letter to him. Nikko had schooled himself to conceal his feelings, but as the square folded paper fluttered towards him, his control snapped like a reed. Without a word of thanks he snatched it up, and clattering down the stairs raced to the Cercle d'Enfer—the washing place—which at that hour of the day was deserted.

As he ran, a freak of imagination sent his mind somersaulting back over a span of seven years and he was a boy again, racing with Bettany's first letter in search of solitude.

The letter was brief.

"I am waiting at the Hotel de Maroc. J. H."

The initials puzzled him. Illumination came. J. H. stood for Joris Howard, Fladgate's son-in-law. Veronica's husband. His old school friend.

Tingling with excitement, Nikko tore the note in small pieces, and buried them. Then he returned to his quarters and changed hastily.

At the barrack gate the sergeant of the guard called on him to halt.

"Name of a dog—do you not read the orders?"

Nikko had buttoned his coat from left to right, instead of right to left in accordance with the order of the day.

"Get back to your quarters."

It was vain to plead. Seething with rage, Nikko returned, rebuttoned his coat, and waited an hour before making a second attempt to pass out."

"If I'm stopped again," he muttered, "I'll go mad—I know I'll go mad."

But he was not stopped. The sergeant's attention had been diverted for the moment, and Nikko slipped past the sentry, unnoticed.

The Hotel de Maroc was situated on the outskirts of the town. Before its doors was a large yellow car, in which was seated a girl. It was Veronica.

Although he had only seen her once, and that seven years ago, Nikko instantly recognized her.

Shortening his step, he passed the car on the offside and, without looking up, said swiftly:

"Tell him to walk to that clump of trees by the broken wall."

Veronica started. Nikko passed on.

In the shade of the clump of trees hidden by a tumbledown wall, he crouched and waited.

Footsteps approached — and a man's shadow spread across the sand at his feet. A voice said:

"Cheyne."

"'Tisn't safe to talk here," said Nikko, rapidly. "We mustn't be seen together."

"Skirt round the back of the hotel and hop in through the first window in the west wall."

"Right."

The footsteps retreated and died away. Nikko peered down the road. It was empty. Veronica was no longer in the car.

Nikko rose, returned by the way he had come and dived up a narrow passage between the hotel and the next house.

There was no one in the garden and with a sigh of satisfaction he vaulted the rail of a low veranda and swung his legs over the sill of an open window. Without looking to see who was in the room, he seized the shutters, drew them across the window and snapped down the bar.

After the brilliant sunlight the room seemed unnaturally dark. Like ghosts, two figures approached him and seized his hands, while a voice in a soft purring accent crooned,

"If this isn't the loveliest meeting—I'd like to know what is."

It may have been the touch of a woman's hand—the sound of a woman's voice—the sudden unaccustomed experience of being once more with people of his own kind that robbed

Nikko of the power of speech and put upon him a shyness and restraint he had never before known.

Veronica made him sit on the bed, and with swift intuition talked of this and that until an ease of their society began to steal through him.

"Father was back home," she announced, "and guessed after breaking so long a silence you wanted something to happen quick. He couldn't have made this place under three weeks, so he figured we'd better come right over."

"We were at Cannes," Joris cut in, "cruising round on Arbuthnot's yacht. The old man sent us a fifteen-page cable saying I'd better shoot over and see you straight away."

"Course he meant me to come, too," Veronica cut in. "So we ups and orders Teddy to set sail quick and lively."

Nikko stiffened.

"Why, sure, and hired this little auto for the desert trip."

Nikko's hands were opening and shutting with excitement.

"Where is the yacht lying?"

"Oran," said Joris.

"Oran—bad spot for me," said Nikko, "but it can't be helped."

"You're not thinking of making a bolt for it."

"I've gone beyond thinking."

Veronica clapped her hands.

"Didn't I say—didn't I? When we read that bit in the papers about the revolution in Sciriel—didn't I say?"

And suddenly Nikko realized that Sciriel was no longer a forbidden subject. That he was free at last to speak the truth.

"You were right, Veronica."

"I'll say I was—and I'll say I wouldn't have thought much of you if I hadn't been."

"Wait a bit," said Joris. "'Tisn't as easy as it looks. Suppose you didn't pull it off, old friend, got yourself nabbed—and all that?"

Nikko laughed.

"I've a feeling no power on earth is going to stop me—now."

"And what's more," said Veronica, "no power on earth is going to stop us getting you aboard Teddy Arbuthnot's yacht."

Nikko looked into a pair of eyes that brimmed with fierce excitement.

"I half wish," he began, but Joris dropped a hand on his shoulder.

"No use, Cheyne, she would come. She isn't the kind of wife that gets left out."

Veronica smiled.

"It's been slow work," she said, "but I've got that great truth into his head at last. Give us the movement orders. What's the route—and when do we start?"

"Now," said Nikko, "for if I were to the Legion after this—I'd—I'd—"

"Fetch out that suitcase and a set of razors," said Veronica. "I'll go and see there's plenty of gas in the tank, while he guillotines that mustache and gets into Christian clothes."

The big yellow car picked up a walking civilian outside the city of Sidi-bel-Abbes. After that it traveled at speed in the direction of Oran.

"It's unlikely that they'll notice my absence before morning," said Nikko, "but we won't linger and we won't stop on the road."

He pointed to a couple of white burnosed Arabs mounted on ponies, who were riding against the skyline of a sandy ridge, and added:

"Goums! My dead body 'ud be worth twenty-five francs to those chaps."

Joris' foot went down on the accelerator.

Veronica's face was bright with excitement.

"Millionaires are cheap out here," she said. "I wouldn't have missed this little picnic for something."

"Millionaires," Nikko echoed.

"As near as doesn't matter," then with an upward fling of the voice. "Good lands! we never told him—he doesn't know. Father turned over your little pile to some effect. You can write your name against six figures when you've the fancy."

"That's true," Joris endorsed, over his shoulder. "The old man has done you proud, Cheyne. Lord knows how, but he did it. Round about seven hundred and fifty thousand, I believe."

For a mile Nikko said nothing—while the realization of nearing freedom—of the wealth he would command and of the possibilities of the future stirred and fermented in his brain.

"Faster," he said, "won't it go faster?"

"We're running at fifty-eight—but I'll try and squeeze out another mile or two."

"You do," said Veronica, "for Nicholas Cheyne hasn't lived for seven years and feels it's about time he made a start."

There was no moon and the night was very dark. To be on the safe side, Nikko curled himself up on the floor boards at Veronica's feet and was covered by a rug as they entered the silent streets of Oran. At the head of the main thoroughfare they were stopped by a patrol.

"From which direction have you come?" boomed out of the darkness.

"Did you see ought of a deserter from the Foreign Legion near the town of Sidi-bel-Abbes?"

"No, unless that would be a fellow in baggy breeches hauled by a rope end by a couple of mounted Arabs."

A grim laugh followed this ready improvisation.

"That will be him, sure enough, Monsieur. The Goums have him. Well, good night."

"Nothing else I can tell you?" Joris inquired.

"Nothing. Good night again."

Joris drove on. Over his shoulder he demanded,

"Veronica, you little mutt! What were you doing with that pistol?"

"I guess if necessity arose I was preparing to use it," she answered sweetly.

Nikko Cheyne, under his covering of rugs, kissed the point of a dusty shoe and counted himself privileged to do so.

When next the car stopped it was beside the quay.

"There's the yacht, Cheyne, at anchor."

Nikko peered through the darkness at the riding lights and nodded.

"Think you could swim out to her? There are sure to be gendarmes or officials on the jetty where the dinghy is moored."

"Of course I could."

"Then suppose you hide somewhere all this gear and stuff. We'll return the car to the garage and then get back to the yacht. No good arriving ther beyond us. The watch would be certain to spot you and kick up a shine. Soon as we get aboard I'll flash a lantern. There's a rope ladder on the port side. Understand?"

To Nikko, waiting at the edge of freedom for the signal to start, that half hour was an eternity. He curled down among a litter of rigging and fishermen's gear and strained unblinking eyes through the heavy darkness. The oily water below clucked derisively. Wavelets tap, tap, tapped against the stones. From the native quarter of the town came the persistent throbbing of a drum and wail of a pipe that seemed to be blown by lips of despair. Then came another and more terrifying sound, the rasping footfalls of a patrol coming nearer and nearer like the approach of fate itself. Voices spoke close to where he lay hidden. A match flared—a cigarette was lit—and the patrol passed on and out of hearing.

It seemed more like a day than half an hour before a new sound, the splash of oars, came to his ears. A woman's voice, sweet and lilting, rippled across the water. The words she sang were made beautiful by darkness, by distance, and by their significance:

One more river—one more river to Jordan.
One more river—there's one more river to cross.

Filtering through the spars and rigging of sleeping ships, the old marching song sounded exquisite and rare. It died away like a breeze that stirs grass, and presently a light flashed. One—two—three!"

Nikko Cheyne entered the water as silently as a rat, and ten minutes later stood dripping upon the white deck of a floating piece of England.

* * * *

At a town in Czecho-Slovakia Nikko Cheyne bade farewell to his two staunch friends.

"If conditions are at all possible," said he, "I'll let you know—but, from what one hears, they aren't. Besides, I've an idea I want to prospect on my own."

"We shall be standing by at Fiume," said Joris.

Veronica was angry.

"If you won't take me, at least you might take Joris."

But Nikko shook his head.

"If fortune turns my way," he said, "I'll have brought her out of Sciriel inside a month. If there were more of us, we should excite suspicion and comment. You've been marvelous to me—so don't deny me this last favor."

Veronica took his hands in hers and petted them.

"Have it your own way. But, whatever you do, don't take long. If rumor's to be trusted, Sciriel is no sort of place for an ex-princess."

Nikko kissed Veronica's hands and saw them off by the afternoon train, after which he called upon the British consul.

"My dear sir," said the official, "you must please yourself, but it's ten to one against getting into Sciriel; and if you do succeed, it's a thousand to one against getting out of it."

"I shall get in—never fear."

"There are no trains, as, I suppose, you know."

Nikko nodded.

"And no passports are being issued. The country has cut itself off from civilization completely."

"I have the finest passport," said Nikko, slapping his breast pocket suggestively.

The consul laughed.

"Freedom has no use for money. The currency of Sciriel was withdrawn from circulation ten months ago. Everything is rationed nowadays. It is a punishable offense to be found in the possession of notes or silver."

"Well, we shall see," said Nikko.

Two days later, astride a raw-boned nag, with a pack mule ambling at the end of a leading-rein, Nikko Cheyne rode up the Solji gorge, which led to the frontiers of Sciriel. On one side, cut into the naked rocks beside the road, were the endless twists and turns of the disused permanent way, its once bright rails now red with rust and distorted from lack of attention.

The air grew very cold and eager as Nikko reached the higher levels. He drew his coat more closely about him and tugged the fur cap down over his ears. The huge precipitous slopes on either side were cloaked with pines, black as night against the snow.

Four hours' slow ascent brought Nikko to the summit, and here he reined in to rest the beasts and looked down in admiration through a funnel of jagged alps upon a vast alluvial basin expanding to the east and falling away into glens and lowlands through which he traced the courses of rivers. The mighty landscape was starred here and there with villages, whose white houses were huddled together like birds in a nest. Miles away to the southeast, piercing a haze of smoke, rose the spires and roofs of a city.

There could be no doubt this was Djevo, the capital, for all the roads which ran like straight white lines across that land of meadow and vineyard converged at this single point.

Nikko's heart hammered against his ribs with a sudden fury of expectation. Somewhere beneath those pale mists was Bettany, for whose sake for seven years he had been an exile.

Bettany—yes, and really Bettany now—no longer the Princess Natalie Meliora Maria Elizabeta—but Bettany the woman.

Nikko Cheyne drew a great breath of mountain air and tightened his reins for the descent into Sciriel.

had seen these two the night before at a Citrus Ball at the Ritz where Jane's and Edna Raine's carnival costumes were among the most attractive present. With Jane and Steve on both occasions was their charming mother. Also at Pall Mall on that Saturday night was June Cochrane, prominently identified with "The Girl Friend." This Miss Cochrane during her off-stage moments resides at Forest Hills, and she promptly told me she knew the man Ann Couper had married, and that already everybody in Forest Hills was crazy about Anne. There was present Mrs. Teague from Asheville whom so many of you know, and while listening to her southern drawl I looked up to see Broadway as represented by Genevieve Tobin, of "The Play's the Thing," waltzing by. That delectable daughter of Grantland Rice around whom your smitten correspondent suddenly becomes all hands and feet was also a popular dancer. Carroll McComas, star of "The Night Hawk," was on the entertainment program and her part of the evening's work consisted in whistling. Miss McComas is the kind who whistles in all seriousness, and it was not her intention as far as I can learn, to be funny. Whistling I fear is an accomplishment I do not regard with quite the right amount of reverence.

Things New and Old About The Bible :

By W. P. KING
Pastor First Methodist Church, Athens, Ga.

The Heralds of a New Heroism.

THE war on war is now under way. Those who imply that the opponents of war are lacking in courage should make a study of the heroism of the early church and the heroism of missionaries.

The heralds of the new heroism must call the church back from her apostasy to the old heroism of the early Christians.

The primitive Christians renounced war. All who bore the sword of Rome were excluded from the number of Catechismens, and those who voluntarily become soldiers were excommunicated.

We call upon our traditionalists to become sure enough traditionalists and not to stop with medievalism, but go back to the primitive church.

The trouble with some of our conservative brethren is that they do not go back far enough. This is the trouble with some who pride themselves on their orthodoxy. Their orthodoxy is medieval orthodoxy. It is evident that in reality the conservative are those who conserve the high values of pure and unadulterated Christianity.

Trenacus writes: "Christians have changed their swords and lances into instruments of peace."

Later the bishops and popes became militarists.

A recent writer says: "The early Christian church was the first peace society."

The historian Lecky wrote: "Of military religion Christianity had been at first the extreme negative. When the cross was carried in the forefront of the Roman armies it was evident that a great change was passing over the peaceful spirit of Christianity. The stigma which Christianity had attached to war was gradually effaced. The transition to the essentially military Christianity of the Crusaders was both the terror and example of the Mohammedans."

Whatever may be said by way of extenuation of the practical necessity of war in other stages of our civilization, the time has come for Christians to again become Christians, and for the church to again become the church of Jesus Christ.

There must be the creating of a new conscience concerning war or the bringing back of the lost conscience of the church.

Glenn Frank writes: "The state may spend its time dilly-dallying with the problem of war; the church dare not. "If in the future the church is to be more than an exhorting ambulance-driver in world politics it must choose now between Jesus and the generals."

"No casuistry on this point appeals to me for a moment," said Lord Parmoor. "We must cast our lot as Christians against all war. We must regard it as a curse and an abomination."

This may appear to some to be extreme but there is no question that if the church should take this high position, the state would suddenly see a new light and find a reasonable and Christian way of settling difficulties rather than appeal to brute force.

The editor of Zion's Herald writes: "Surely in this democracy of ours we want no development of Prussianism. Every thoughtful citizen, especially in days of peace, resents anything that looks like war orders, goose-stepping, militarized education, and other expressions of force. He prefers calm discussions, logical arguments, and constructive plans that look toward cooperations and world peace, rather than attempts to stifle free speech and promote ill-will in international relationships. The fate of Germany ought to be a lesson for us, but apparently there are many militarists, some even in places of leadership, who still bow down to physical force as the only possible instrument for the settlement of disputes among the nations, and seek by coercive measures to penalize all those who disagree with them.

One element of the moral equivalent of war is the war against war.

The new heroism must resist the jingoistic patriotism which in reality is an enemy of its own nation as well as other nations.

The heralds of the new heroism will not be disturbed when the air is thick and lurid with resolutions of so-called patriotic organizations. There is a called for courage surpassing all the heroism of bloody battlefields.

You will be charged with cowardice by men who identify courage with brute violence.

You will see your "words twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools."

You will be condemned by an effite orthodoxy which betrays Christ with the kiss of an empty compliment and is guilty of the greatest form of heresy against divine love and human brotherhood.

We are exhorted to "War a good warfare" and we can find a sufficient number of causes to enlist our fighting instincts.

Prof. Francis G. Peabody gives these strong words: "It is a brave thing to be a soldier, but may it not be a still braver thing to be a Saviour?"

It needs a still greater courage to take the sword of the spirit. Ought not the time then soon come when the application of the fighting instinct to the brutality of bloodshed will be recognized as a base prostitution of one of the noblest traits of human nature, from which real men will turn with disgust to the real wars of creative tasks; and when the famous names of warfare will not be those of great generals who have depopulated hostile lands, but of the greater generals who have directed the armies of science and healing, of public service and the amelioration of life to beneficient and cooperative ends.

The instincts of militarism cannot be destroyed, but they can be fulfilled, and the victories of the battlefield may be supplanted by that self-effacing and creative heroism which shall have the right to sing the hymn of triumph, "Thanks be to God who gives us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord." The spirit of militarism must be converted to the spirit of service and the battles of the future won by the sword of the spirit."

We must carry on a warfare for a genuine patriotism that opposes lawlessness, that fights against injustice, against intemperance, against ignorance, superstition and disease. We must carry on a ceaseless crusade against racial and national hatred. Milton says to Cromwell: "Much remains to conquer still. Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." It is true that the victories of peace are greater than those of war and it is for the heralds of a new heroism to win these greater victories. "There all men's good shall be each man's rule, and united peace lie like a shaft of light across the land."

ASKS PRISON TERMS FOR ALL "VAMPS" AND "SHEIKS" position, but it comes mostly from the selfish interests."

Said "interests" seem to be rallying around State Senator W. H. Chambers, of Omaha, who not only is not supporting the Anti-Sheiking bill but has introduced a bill of his own which is as different as can be.

Not only would Chambers refuse to prosecute, criminally, those who sheik or vamp the affections of husbands and wives, he would not allow a "wronged husband" or "injured wife" to collect more than one cent damages in a civil alienation of affections suit.

Not sheiks, but gold-diggers, menace the peace and security of Nebraska, in Senator Chambers' opinion. He says mercenary husbands and wives are commercializing the heart-balm suit idea, and it shocks his sense of romance.

"We sentimentalists are entitled to some protection," he argues. "We believe love is something intimate and sacred, and the last thing in the world to be bartered in the market-place.

"Yet every day or two twelve good men and true get together in some jury-room and try to figure out the value of the lost love of some worthless wife who ran off with the other man.

"It's downright professionalism, that's what it is, and I think that one cent is too much for any 'injured party' who would bring a heart-balm suit. I don't think the affections of all the runaway wives of the last decade are worth the price of a box of good cigars."

Chambers is knocking Cooper's bill, and the two legislators, who used to be the best of pals, are thoroughly "alienated" over this alienation question.

To make it all the more exciting, Senator Chambers is just as much married as Senator Cooper is otherwise.

THE WALL

I think it's partly that tenor." He tried again to laugh.

And so somehow, they found themselves outside—the coaxing black water lapping up against the landing steps in soft, gentle little splashes. There was a sort of frantic desperation in Alec Farraday's eyes as he turned.

"Can't we—can't we walk somewhere?" he asked. "You know, Julia, I feel as if I—I needed exercise. The laziness of this darned town has finally gotten on my nerves."

And Julia, looking up at him, her own lips curved to a smile that mocked the pain in her heart, nodded. Vaguely she understood. If they'd been at home they would have tramped out over the low hills.

She said, a bit unsteadily, "But in Venice it isn't the thing to do, Alec. No one walks. By day it's too hot. At night it's dark and a bit terrifying. Little dark courts—black, humpbacked bridges."

He nodded contritely. "You're right, Julia. When in Rome——"

But she put out a protesting hand as he moved toward a gondola. "I lived in Rome, Alec, and didn't do as the Romans. I'd like to walk, too. We'll probably find a nice roundabout way to the Piazza."

"The Piazza! Florian's! Can't we ever get away from them?"

Julia shrugged. "You're rebellious tonight. There isn't a nicer place in Venice than Florian's. It's gay and light—and safe." She caught her breath.

Alec laughed. Their steps quickened, echoed against the pavements. Water from a narrow dark canal lapped at their feet. A gondolier's cry rang out ominously. In the murky flare of an old street lamp, Julia saw the white set look about Alec Farraday's mouth that belied the laugh in his voice.

"You're fairly racing," she reminded him.

He slowed down and smiled dismally. "Human beings are queer," he said. "I thought I had no sentiment in my soul, and I'm actually low, down and out at the idea of this being my last night here. Heven knows when I'll see you again—Julia!"

She tried for a gay, disarming answer and couldn't summon it. She thought of the gloomy old Pension Camarini. "We never know," she said lightly.

"I believe this place has gotten on your nerves, too," he said.

"It belongs too much to the past, Alec. We might be back in the middle ages." She turned her head to indicate the black wall with its one flaring window of light.

A dark figure came out of a doorway, crossed their path. Julia caught at Alec's arm—and as quickly drew away.

"Little goose," he said gently, "you are afraid. We'll go back to the Piazza. You're right. Florian's is the safe place. Lights and laughter and music. That's what we want to remember on our last evening, isn't it?"

"Certainly Venice is no place to wander about in at night," she said. "It's too intricate. I don't believe we're going back the way we came, at all."

They stopped short under another murky lamp and looked about. Certainly that wasn't the bridge they had just crossed. The buildings about were black and solemn, their window eyes tightly shut. They went on, the warm, breathless quiet of the city of silences wrapping about them. Julia's voice sounded thin, strange. "The dome of that church, Alec—I recognize it. We've walked further than we thought."

"The thing is to reach it through this jumble of buildings!" he said.

She pointed to an opening in the arched wall ahead of them. "There's a gate. It's probably into a private court but I believe if we cut through——"

They peered into the opening.

"There's a well or something—and a statue," said Alec.

Julia gave a little gasp of surprise. "It's lovely," she breathed. "Medieval."

Some pale colored flowers hung like ghosts against a black stretch of wall—the statue of the little girl in the fountain shone dimly and pearly in an uncertain shaft of light from a dingy lantern at the far gate. It was perhaps the little white figure of the child that made the caught, breathtaking stillness between them. Julia thought of the pale little wading boy in the fountain at Northfield. But as she looked up at Alec Farraday he turned his face to the far gate.

"Ought to find a way out of here, Julia," he said quietly.

Julia's laugh was like a thin meager wraith trying to live in the stillness. "We—we're all right," she assured him. "There's the church right through the gate." She half led the way along the crumbling flags to the rust-eaten iron grill that barred the way. "It's locked!" she cried.

"Then we are trespassing! And it looks like a princely domain belonging to one of the old Palazzo's. Thank fortune you have a title, Julia. It may help us." He offered a little half laugh.

"Princely!" Julia shrugged. "It's probably a playground for slum children by day. A lot of the old world has to be taken by moonlight."

As if he hadn't heard her, Alec Farraday was bending over the lock. "I'll be darned if I can find the combination," he said.

Her own hand reached exploringly upwards, touched him. For a second, a wisp of a second, their touching fingers clung. And in that one quick silver atom of time Julia breathed a frantic little prayer.

"Dear God," she prayed, "I want to tell him the truth. Help me to tell him the truth! But how can I?" she argued fruitlessly to herself. "To break through the wall of my pride—my last defense, and find pity!"

Alec's voice, strangely tense, ripped into the silence. "We'll be getting foolish if we stay in the black magic of this place much longer, Julia. And tomorrow—" his caught, unsteady laugh ended dismally. "Here, I'll strike a match and see if I can't open it."

There was the friendly sputter of the match on the stones of the wall—the yellow flare of light. A low burst of song, and the gentle swish of an oar rose from the canal. And then, with a clang, the bolt slid back under Alec's hand.

"That's all it needed," he laughed, "a bit of strength!"

The gate in the wall swung open. The broad and lighted canal was a stone's throw away—a vision of loveliness. But as they stepped forward to go through, Julia laid her hand on his arm. "Not yet, Alec, it's too beautiful," she said breathlessly.

And in the magic stillness of that second she repeated to herself his words, "A little strength!" Then, with half a sob catching in her throat she said, "Alec, I'm silly, sentimental perhaps, tonight—but this, all this—" She swept her hand towards the delicate jeweled loveliness before them, "and this gate—it reminds me of my childhood. Did I ever tell you about the wall, Alec? That was a funny thing," she rushed on.

"When I was a youngster I always wanted to play with the little girls on Center street. O, I wanted to do a hundred things, Alec; but my nurse always told me my position wouldn't allow it.

"And so I began to think about being Julia Sloan, and having to live in the big house and everything as if it were a wall—a wall that stood between me and all the things I really ever wanted. I hated the wall. But I never had the strength to break through. Now if I had, I might have come out of loneliness into beauty like this!"

In the stillness, Alec Farraday's hand reached down to hers, gripped her icy fingers. "You're cold," he said shakily, "You'll be sick!"

"Would it matter much?" she said slowly.

His grip on her cold little fingers tightened almost to a point of pain. "Julia," he said huskily, "Are you trying to torture me? I can't pretend any longer. You know that I love you. But for God's sake, Julia, either tell me to get out of your sight forever, or——" The grip about her fingers lessened. His arms dropped to his sides. "Don't laugh at me, Julia, I guess I am—mad."

Julia lifted her tragic little white face to him. "Alec!" she whispered.

And he caught her in his arms.

"Hold me close, Alec," she begged, "because I need courage to tell you a hundred things. But I had to know whether you really loved me, Alec, I had to know that first. You see you might have been just sorry for me. And I didn't want that, Alec—I could not have stood that! You see I'm really terribly poor and——"

He stopped her words with his lips. "Beloved," he said, "You can tell me all that some other time. But now, this minute, after all these years of losing you and longing for you and loving you—I can't hear anything but the song in my own heart!"

And now whenever there is a newcomer or a guest of honor at the bridge tables or the tea tables of the Franklin County Country club, some one is quite sure to point out the magnificent new white colonial on the slope above Summit road.

"That," the visitor will be told, "is the home of the Countess Danzietti—I should say, of course, the Alec Farradays! But then we always think of Julia as the Countess Danzietti! You haven't heard? My dear, she gave up one of the old titles of Italy to come back here and marry Alec Farraday. And the count was the most fascinating person! Really it seems incredible. Of course, Alec is a dear—a nice plain common sense business man—and making scads of money. But imagine it! The most utterly unromantic thing I've ever known."

Which only proves that Northfield really knew neither Julia Sloan—nor Alec Farraday!

Cookies in Shape of Bunnies and Chicks Can Be Made for Easter

How would you like to make some fancy cookies for Easter? Making them will be fun for the whole family, and they will be delicious as little Easter gifts for your friends.

You will need two cooky cutters, one in the form of a bunny and the other in the form of a baby chick, which can be bought at a "five and ten cent store" for a nickel each.

Here is the recipe:

1-2 cup butter and lard (Equal parts)
1 1-2 cups sugar
1-4 cup milk
2 eggs
1-2 teaspoon vanilla
3 1-2 cups flour
1-2 teaspoon salt
2 1-2 teaspoons baking powder

Cream the shortening and sugar together, add milk to the beaten eggs, and slowly add this to the creamed shortening and sugar. Add the vanilla and then the flour, sifted with salt and baking powder. Roll the dough out upon a flour board and cut with the cooky cutters into bunnies and chicks. Sprinkle with sugar and use nuts, raisins or bits of candied cherry for the eyes. Bake ten minutes in a moderate oven.

Wrap the bunnies and chicks that are to be used as gifts in squares of waxed paper, tying a narrow ribbon of a pretty color around the neck of each one. The transparent wax paper will allow the cooky to be plainly seen through it.

POSERS!

Who, what and why!

These three words should be in use all the time. Don't be afraid to ask questions if the answers are going to tell you something you don't know. See if you know the answers to the eight posers. If you don't you will learn something from them.

1. Who was Maximilian?

3. Who wrote "A Midsummer Night's Dream?"
4. Who wrote "A Man Without a Country?"
5. Who was the first woman to swim the English channel?
6. Who is the woman tennis champion of the world?
7. Who played a fiddle while Rome burned?
8. Who was Guiseppe Garibaldi?

THE REAL TEST.

It is easy enough to be happy
When one has beauty and youth;
But the girl worth while
Is the girl who can smile
Right after she's lost a front tooth.

HIKING SUGGESTIONS FOR OUTDOOR GIRLS.

Besides your regular equipment of food and clothing, you should take the following items along on your overnight hike: a match safe, jack knife, stout cord or small rope, strong enough to sustain the weight of a person and from twenty to thirty feet long, a compass and, if possible, a pair of small field glasses.

A good match safe can be made from two empty shotgun shells, one small enough to fit inside the other. If the matches are dipped in melted paraffin, they can be lighted in the rain. The rope may come in handy when traveling through rough country. The compass will give you the correct directions in cloudy weather and the knife will come in handy many times.

A rather rapid, regular stride is important for hiking. Your first impulse may be to run or walk too fast. Keep your gait down to two steps a second for awhile until you get your second wind, for on the long trip you may need all the reserve strength you possess. Caution other members of the party against too much exertion at first. You can practice walking along the walk at home and in doing so, determine your most efficient length of step, then practice making all your steps as nearly the same length as possible.

Another thing to watch (this should be done in dust or sand) is the position of your feet when they touch the ground. Train yourself to take steps which show the inside of the feet moving along a parallel line. If your feet turn out, your walking will be inefficient.

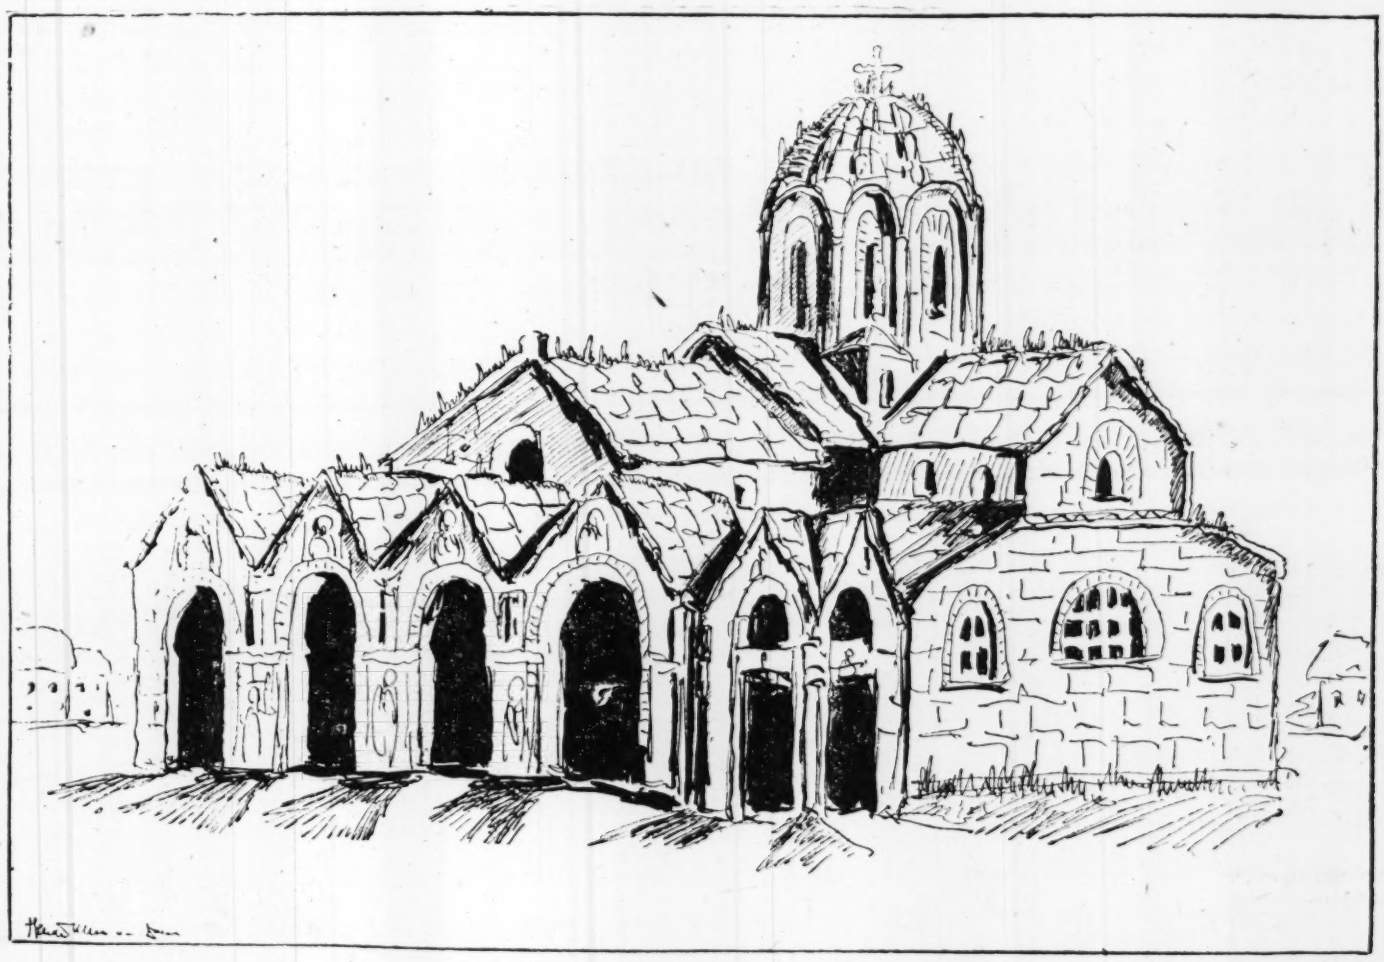

Walk straight ahead with your head firmly erect and your back straight. A pack on your back—not too heavy—will help you to assume a correct walking posture.

Famous Monuments — Byzantine Church in Athens — By Hendrik Van Loon

Color Instructions

The Byzantine people—the Greeks who continued the eastern half of the Roman empire for ten centuries longer than their western cousins—were not familiar with the modern technique of painting. Oil was not in common use in the studio until after the beginning of the fifteenth century. When they wanted to paint anything they had to use vinegar or the white of egg or wine to put the color on the stone or the panel that served them as a background. And as wine and vinegar and the white of egg were smeary and clumsy and did not stick very well, they did most of their painting with little bits of colored stone or glass—with so-called mosaics. These mosaics added a strange touch of subdued brilliancy to all Byzantine buildings. I know that "subdued brilliancy" sounds like nothing in particular, but if you will repeat the phrase a few times you will probably get the meaning.

You can paint this little church any way you please but be sure to use what we call "warm tones." You will understand what I mean by warm tones if I ask you to campare a snow-covered landscape with a forest clad in the scarlet hues of the late fall.

And you need not worry about the color combinations either, for the Byzantines, like the Russians and most semi-oriental peoples, liked a riot of colors. But not in the Chinese way. They were not a gay or happy people. They appreciated good music, but they preferred to have it played with a mute.

A FEW Sundays ago I told you how Greenland, now an inhospitable continent almost entirely covered with ice, was once upon a time a Norwegian colony.

For some reason it seems even stranger to me to have to write about Greece as a colony. For we are so accustomed to regard the ancient home of Homer and Pericles and Aristotle as the beginning and end of all mental and artistic perfection that it is not easy to imagine it as a rocky strip of land for which half a dozen nations fought that they might add it to the rest of their colonial possessions.

And yet that is exactly what happened to Greece during the latter half of the Middle Ages.

It was not until the fifth or sixth centuries of our era that Greece ceased to be the home of culture and was the great boarding school attended by all the young Romans who could afford so expensive an education.

Then came the invasion of the barbarians from the east and the north of Europe and the center of Asia, and Greece was overrun by hordes of hairy, dirty blond giants who had no use for "learnin" and who burned and pillaged to their hearts' content.

But in due course of time these wild men were tamed by the church and were prevailed upon to settle down like decent Christians and cultivate the deserted farms of the old Romans.

It was then that Venice and Genoa and the Byzantine empire (the eastern remnant of the old Roman empire) began to fight for the spoils of the eastern half of the Mediterranean and built their fortresses and their counting houses in Jerusalem and Athens and Smyrna and Alexandria. And it was then that Byzantine missionaries conquered Greece for their own church, drove away the Latin monks and built their strange and dark churches among the ruins of the old Greek temples.

Some of these have been saved almost intact. And today they stand upright, while the Parthenon is in ruins. But there is a reason.

The old Greek structures were so solidly built that the Venetians and the Turks could use them as fortifications and powder magazines. And so they suffered more severely than a little Byzantine chapel which at best could only be converted into a stable.

Behind the Norstrum House

A Tale of a Bob Sled, a Broken Leg, and Baseball

BY W. BOYCE MORGAN

Author of "The Abandoned Mine," "The Barricaded Gate," "Raging Waters," etc.

SYNOPSIS.

The coming of spring finds Bill Perkins, captain of the Shartlon High school baseball team, an invalid in his home. Several months before he and a number of his friends had built a new bob sled. In its first trip down the coasting hill one night, the bob had reached a field behind the Norstrum residence when Bill, who was steering, shouted to the boys to jump and steered the flying sled into a tree. The other boys had escaped with minor injuries, but Bill had one leg broken and his head injured. As a result he partially lost his memory and is unable to remember why he ran the sled into the tree. His leg, although healed, is paralyzed and he cannot walk, and a new captain of the baseball team is elected. Bill realizes that he now cannot afford to enter college in the fall. His friend, Pete, vainly tries to help him remember the details of the accident, but as Shartlon High prepares to start the season with a crippled team, it is still a mystery.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

INSTALLMENT II.

The day for Shartlon High's opening game of the baseball season against Drake dawned clear and warm. The diamond was not entirely dry, but it was in fair condition for playing, and the whole school was eagerly awaiting a sight of the team in action.

Everyone realized that the absence of Bill Perkins from second base was a serious blow to the team's chances of winning the county championship. The game with Drake was not a league game, but at least it would serve to show just how badly the team was affected by the loss of its captain.

Bill had passed a gloomy Saturday morning. He hobbled about the house on his crutches, restless and depressed. Even the arrival of Pete just after lunch to accompany him to the field, failed to cheer him up, and the boys walked slowly toward the diamond in silence, Bill making his way as best he could with the help of his friend.

To reach the high school diamond they skirted the field at the foot of Higgins hill, close by the impressive home of the Norstrums. It was here that the bob sled accident had occurred; in fact, they walked past the very tree that had been Bill's undoing. As they reached it, Bill stopped and gazed back up the long, steep hill.

"We certainly were traveling that night, Pete," he said grimly. "Seems to me that standing here I ought to be able to remember now it happened."

He stood for several minutes, his brows wrinkled in thought, but finally he shook his head.

"It's no use. I steered into this tree, but why I dont' know." He gazed at the back porch of the Norstrum home, only a few yards away. "I don't suppose any of the Norstrums saw us hit—it was too dark. And all you fellows on the sled not seeing anything because you had your heads down out of the wind." He shook his head sadly.

"We'd better keep moving if we want to get to the field in time to watch practice," interrupted Pete.

"All right," answered Bill, and they resumed their course toward the field. Suddenly a voice calling from the Norstrum house arrested their attention, and they turned to see a woman walking toward them. It was Mrs. Norstrum, wife of the town's wealthiest man. Beside her trotted her little three-year-old daughter, Dorothy.

"It was too late, and two runs were in"

"What in the world can Mrs. Norstrum want with us," marveled Pete. In a minute he knew.

"Boys," she said with a smile, although she did not know them, "I just wanted to warn you about going through the field there. The man living in the next house has a big dog that is sick, and he is very vicious. He got loose this morning and almost bit a delivery boy. So you'd better look out for him."

"Oh, I see," answered Bill. "Thank you ever so much for telling us. We'll watch out for him."

"Bad - doggie," remarked little Dorothy. The two boys laughed, and thanking Mrs. Norstrum again, they moved on.

"Nice lady, isn't she?" Pete commented. "We'll have to be careful, for you aren't in very good shape to run from any vicious animals."

However, they continued their course because it was short and Bill was unable to walk far, and they reached the field without mishap.

The stands were already starting to fill as the two boys made their way into the bleachers along the first base line. A score of his friends called cheery greetings to Bill, and he answered them as best he could. He knew that they felt sorry for him, and he hated that. He also knew that his absence was a blow to his school, and that hurt even more.

The Shartlon team was already engaged in fielding practice. In Bill's old position at second base was Johnny Peters, a young sophomore with no experience. Bill watched his work, and in a few moments his heart was heavy. Johnny tried hard, but he simply wasn't very good.

Bill's eyes grew dim as the cheer leaders called for a yell for him, and there was a lump in his throat when a minute later, Mr. Eyers, the coach, asked him to come down and sit on the bench with him. He left Pete, and sitting beside the coach, watched the contest.

By the sixth inning Shartlon was leading 5 to 1, mainly because Don Radde, who had been elected captain to take Bill's place, was pitching a wonderful game for so early in the season. But in that inning things started to happen.

Don allowed the first Drake player to walk after he had wasted three balls trying to get him to hit at a low one. The next man up was the catcher, and the heaviest hitter on the team. After taking two strikes, he connected with one at his shoulders and slammed it into deep center. The fielder, after a run, got the ball and relayed it to the plate, but it was too late, and two runs were in.

The next batter raised a pop fly close to second base. The eyes of every spectator were on Peters as that green player ran in a few steps to get it. Then the ball veered with the wind, Peters was caught in too close, and the fly dropped safe behind him. The batter was perched on first.

"Gosh," said the coach to Bill. "That was a bad one. I wish you were in there, boy."

"So do I, Mr. Eyers," answered Bill fervently. "But Johnny is trying awfully hard."

Don now settled down to pitch, and struck the next man out, but the following batter dropped a Texas leaguer over short and there were two men on base.

Bill saw Don turn to the infield. "Steady in there, boys," he was heard to say. "This next man is easy. Watch for a double play."

Then, pitching carefully, Don forced the batter to lay down a grounder. Peters, playing close, started for it. He again came in too far and the ball bounded over his head and into the field. The fielder returned it badly and two more runs scored.

(To Be Continued Next Week.)

"MISSING WORD" LIMERICKS

How do you like limericks? We've got another one for you this week, and it's about baseball. You boys ought to find it easy.

And have you tried making up a limerick of your own and sending it in? Make them funny—we all like a laugh now and then!

In a ball game a batter one day,
Vowed he'd make all the fans yell "Hooray!"
But the fly that he hit,
Found a fielder's soft mitt,
And there weren't any cheers for THAT ———.

THE ZULUS' FEAR.

During an uprising of the Zulus against white rule in South Africa, a British colonel, out scouting, found himself lost in the veldt, without weapons, and only carrying a walking stick.

To make matters worse, he was suddenly surrounded by a horde of savage blacks, all armed with spears and knives. His death seemed absolutely certain.

There seemed no way out, but the resourceful colonel tried a bluff. Assuming a determined expression, he pointed his walking stick straight at the foremost black, and walked toward him.

For a moment the blacks stood their ground, then they began to back away slowly, puzzled and afraid by this strange weapon. As they walked back, the colonel followed, still pointing his walking stick.

Now, fighting with spears was a familiar thing to the Zelu. They also were wildcats with knives, and although they had never handled guns, they had seen them in action. But this strange, long stick which the white man menaced them with was something quite new to them.

Suddenly the colonel, still walking forward, threw the stick up toward his shoulder, like a gun. With one accord, the Zulus turned and ran like mad, dropping spears and knives as they went.

The lesson is simple: The other fellow is just as afraid of you as you are of him!

Short Story, Jr.

THE CHRYSANTHEMUM LADY

Three tall, fluffy chrysanthemum ladies stood in the show window of a flower shop, the center of attraction for an admiring crowd that gathered to look at them.

The ladies did not long remain in the shop, for the great crisp snow-white one was carried away and made the center of a bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley and was carried by a bride in a white veil. The second chrysanthemum lady, who was a deep red-brown with long petals tinged with yellow, discovered that she was a curiosity and so was very proud when she was taken to a chrysanthemum show and had the grand blue ribbon fastened to her stem.

The third golden lady was lonesome in the shop window until some one put her in a box and sent her out to a strange house. There she was placed in the center of a snowy tablecloth while she looked down upon shiny silver, gleaming glass and china plates. Then in came the family. There was a father and a mother, a tall son who talked about "the team," and a beautiful daughter.

After it was all over, and the dishes were cleared away, the chrysanthemum lady began to wonder if her day was over. The family was all a-bustle over leaving for the mysterious "game." The door slammed and the house was very quiet. Then suddenly the girl came running back.

"I'll wear this gorgeous big chrysanthemum on my coat. Its yellow against the black of my fur will make the school colors!" she cried.

The chrysanthemum lady was very proud to go to the game on the coat of the girl, for everywhere the happy girl went people bowed and smiled at her. And everytime she spoke the chrysanthemum lady nodded her golden head, too.

There were things called scores and plays on the field which mystified the chrysanthemum lady very much, but they made the crowd cheer, and so she liked them. But finally, when one player with the ball under his arm made a long run down the field, the girl snatched the chrysanthemum lady from her coat and waved it high in the air. "It's my brother," she cried, and waved harder. The chrysanthemum lady's head became weaker and weaker and wobbled more and more till it finally flew right off and went spinning 'way out into the field, and lay there, a great golden spot in the dust.

Old Lady: "Son, can you direct me to the People's Saving bank?"

Circular photograph of The Constitution's newest press, the "Mary Ann," just dedicated and named for Mary Ann Carr, 14-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clark Howell, Sr. She is the central figure, wearing dark coat suit with white vestee, in the group of her young girl friends assembled with her for the dedication ceremony. This photograph, taken by a circular camera, on account of the length of the press, is rather deceptive, in that it indicates that the press is curved, or set at right angle, whereas it is a straight-line press, 80 feet long, with a printing capacity of 70,000 papers per hour. To the left is the operating force; in the center is John Turner, assistant foreman, and back of him papers printed, cut and folded, and being sent automatically the mailing room above

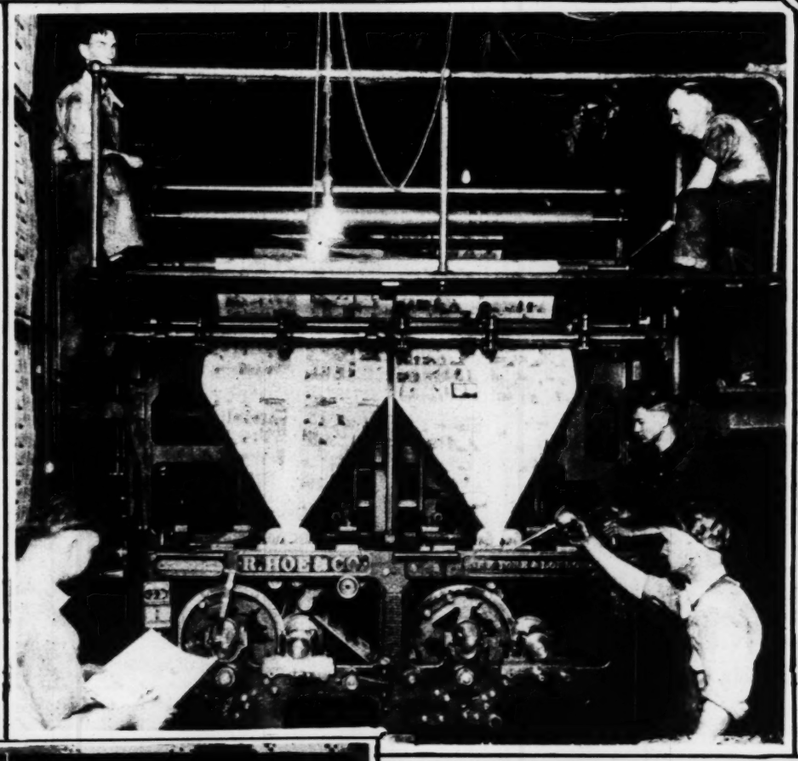

The Constitution dedicates its new Super-Speed 5-Unit Hoe Press—the "Mary Ann"—the third great press of its press-room equipment, giving it the most complete press-room in the Southern states.

IN THE SERVICE OF THE CONSTITUTION FOR MORE THAN FIFTY YEARS—William M. Turner, above, is the foreman of The Constitution's press room with which he has been connected for more than fifty years, having started as a boy apprentice in the old Constitution building on Broad street when The Constitution was printed on a hand press and with a circulation of about 2,000 a day. To the right is shown Mrs. Turner, his wife. Their son, John Turner, now assistant foreman of the press room, and shown in other pictures, was literally born a Constitution boy, and he is now an invaluable assistant, fully prepared to "carry on" the work his father has had in hand for nearly a half century.

Twin of The Constitution's new press, made for The Constitution by R. Hoe & Co., only a few years ago, when it was thought that its output would be large enough to meet all requirements for twenty years. This is one end of the press with the hand of the foreman, W. M. Turner, on the electric button controlling the operation of the press. Behind the foreman is his son, John Turner, assistant foreman. This shows only one end of the press, taking the paper rolls which from end to end web through the press which is 80 feet long.

GRAY HAIR

SCIENCE now finds that hair can be restored to natural shade. No tell-tale, crude dyes that endanger hair health. No mess . . . but instead a clear, colorless 100% safe liquid is used that gives the hair its youthful shade and lustre. Faded hair sparkles with girlhood color. Gray streaks disappear entirely.

Fannie Ward, Popular Actress of the American Stage writes:

"Being looked upon as a sort of female Ponce de Leon, I have to guard not only my appearance against oncoming years, but all those other things that cruel Father Time preys upon—especially the voice. When women ask me which cigarette will not age the voice, or irritate the throat, I open my little cigarette case and show them the one I smoke—'The Lucky Strike.'"

You, too, will find that Lucky Strikes are mild and mellow—the finest cigarettes you ever smoked, made of the finest Turkish and domestic tobaccos, properly aged and blended with great skill, and there is an extra process—"It's toasted"—no harshness, not a bit of bite.
